EDITORIAL

UFOs have captured the attention and imagination of the world. Alien Encounters is now a monthly magazine, dedicated purely to fulfilling the desperate need for information on UFOs and aliens. We will not be afraid to explore ideas, report controversial stories and confront the most profound mystery to face us as a race. You will have noticed our quirky double cover this issue. Which style appeals to you? Don't be afraid to comment on which you preferred, your input could mould the magazine.

The stories worthy of The X Files are no longer associated with the insane, confused and eccentric. They are, for the first time in our history, being stared at in a new light, people are beginning to accept their plausibility. These stories are not exclusive to the USA, Britain now is finding its voice and speaking up about one of the hardest subjects to discuss. Perhaps we will one day know the entire truth and perhaps that day is approaching sooner than we may have imagined.

ALIEN ENCOUNTERS

GENETIC ENGINEERING

While under hypnotic regression, abductees usually talk of their ordeals of being examined and probed by strange alien beings. What keeps emerging and has become the common link in most cases is the suggestion of genetic manipulation.

Male abductees have sperm removed, women have eggs removed, pregnancies induced and then fetuses extracted. Some abductees report seeing liquid-filled tubes with babies suspended in them. If these reports are to be believed then is this all implying some genetic scheme. Hybrid alien/men perhaps, or even cloning?

There is also the school of thought which suggests we ourselves are a species with origins from some other place and many of our alien visitors are the equivalent of watchful forefathers. Prehistory and Man's origins have always been a sketchy area, certainly not as watertight as many evolutionary trails. Could there be a more bizarre explanation for our existence?

MANKIND AS AN ALIEN EXPERIMENT

Did an advanced culture once tamper with the genetic code to create hideous hybrids? Is Man an alien experiment? Harry Hinde reveals some disturbing evidence which suggests genetic engineering is definitely not a new idea.

Did a super race of master scientists once indulge in the most hideous forms of genetic engineering? Experiments so bizarre and ghastly that they involved transplanting the head of humans on goats and eagles? Creatures literally built together and constructed of the limbs and features of every other animal?

Impossible? Well, certainly to our ears, not just impossible but quite ridiculous to even contemplate. But keep on reading. Keep on reading because incredible as it may sound there was once widespread belief that in the earliest prehistory this horrific master race of people did actually exist. In fact there are some who believe that the experimental abilities of these people substantially altered the genetic makeup of our entire species. Some go even further to suggest that Mankind is himself the product of a genetic experiment originated by aliens.

Even more intriguing is the fact that all this is said to have occurred many many millions of years ago, during a period when the world was otherwise in a complete state of chaos. It was thought that an unknown race of beings that inhabited the world of that time acquired the knowledge and ability to be able to control and distort the genetic makeup of all human and animal life forms. Eventually however this experimentation went horrifically wrong and the whole habited world of that day was almost completely destroyed.

We are the product of a long term project, frequently altered and manipulated and sown on this planet like seeds in a vast terrestrial garden.

FACT OR FICTION?

An intriguing story, but where is the evidence? We are after all talking of a period in the deepest prehistory – a time long before Mankind is thought to have even existed. And yet now we are talking not only of a developed species at that time, but also one capable of altering the very blueprints of our existence.

To many this will sound like crossing the very boundaries of credulity. But wait. Let's take things in order. Let's look at the evidence. Let us look first at the earliest records. Mostly these are composed of myths and legends. Not very reliable one might think. But here you would be wrong. The language of the myths may be flowery and hard to fathom but this is mostly because they are riddled with allegory and symbolised happenings. In fact they are something of a code. Ignore them and you ignore a very real source of historical evidence. Treat them with respect however and you invariably open the door to a whole new avenue of thought and enquiry. Here one has only to remember Schliemann's faith in the Iliad and his subsequent discovery of Troy. In fact the truth is that whenever there have been people willing to trust in ancient legends major discoveries have invariably followed.

Even so Troy rates as recent history compared to the timescale we are now thinking of. And yet a record of these times still exists. It is to be found written as part of the annals of one of the earliest cultures on Earth.

MESOPOTAMIA

We go now to Mesopotamia and the ancient records of the Babylonians. It is here in the land of the two rivers that our modern understanding of civilisation arises. Significantly this ancient land possesses a richly developed series of creation myths and many of the later Judaeo-Christian writings, are thought to have been passed down from this once fertile area of Mesopotamia.

It was the belief of these early authors that the world was subject to frequent catastrophes that periodically wiped out nearly all living matter. To a certain extent they believed these catastrophes were predictable, and rather than face the loss of their records and traditions they buried a history of their people in the "city of the sun at Sippara". This was a wise precaution because a fresh disaster is said to have wiped away the entire world of its day. Finally when the survivors returned they remembered the secret records which were unearthed and used to reconstruct the city of Babylon.

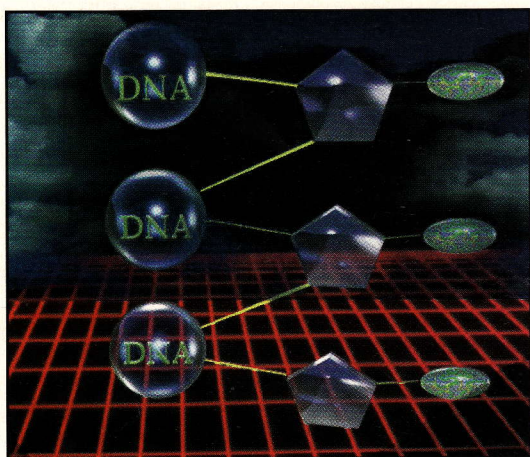

The nature of these records might well have been lost to us forever, but fortunately fragments of what they contained are still to be found. They originate from a source with personal access to these records – the historian Berossus. This Babylonian priest of the temple of Belus, who most commentators credit with an unusually developed sense of historical accuracy lived and wrote in the time of Alexander the Great. Unfortunately his great work Babylonian History, is now lost to us, but fragments of it have been preserved by the classical authors Abydenus, Apollodorus, and Alexander Polyhistor.

Much of the work contained in these fragments is an account of early prehistory. Yet unlike the myths it uses no sense of allegory and is obviously intended to be treated as historical reality. This makes it all the more remarkable because we find a definite reference to a remote period of time when the Earth was populated by the most hideous of creatures:

"There was a time in which there was nothing but darkness and an abyss of waters, wherein resided most awful beings, which were produced of a two-fold principle. Men appeared with two wings, some with four and with two faces. They had one body but two heads; the one of a man, the other of a woman. They were likewise in their several organs both male and female. Other human figures were to be seen with the legs and horns of goats. Some had horses' feet, others had the limbs of a horse behind, but before were fashioned like men, resembling hippocentaurs. Bulls likewise bred with the heads of men and dogs with fourfold bodies, and tails of fishes. Also horses with the heads of dogs: men too and other animals, with the heads and bodies of horses and the tails of fishes." In short these were creatures with the limbs of every other species of animal.

EARLY HISTORY

To any other age – to any other people, this account would have read as no different to any of the many myths and legends. Yet surely now on the eve of the 21st Century we are able to see things differently. In this era of high technological achievement it is possible to re-look at this account with eyes not of incredulity but astonishment at the reality of these dramatic lines of early history. For are we not seeing here the description of a technological era gone crazy?

Berosus speaks of hideous creatures “with the limbs of every species of animal”. Today we can scarcely open a newspaper or turn on the television without learning of a new procedure that cross matches animal and human tissue. Pigs hearts in humans, Lungs of oxen considered as human substitutes and a whole new area of spare parts surgery made possible from animal organs. In addition to this, cloning of animals through biological manipulation is now a distinct possibility. Even scientists are expressing alarm at the rate at which this research is developing. Essentially it means that in the near future it will be possible to clone identical herds of cattle from a single specimen. Image being able to clone a hundred Red Rums all identical in terms of ability and fitness and you have some sort of idea of where we are heading. The know-how is all there and even scientists are becoming concerned as to where this is leading.

David Hopkinson, director of the Human Biochemical Genetics Unit at University College London, said in a recent interview in The Times that he viewed this achievement “with some trepidation”. Another scientist said the whole thing was a truly “appalling prospect”.

The reality is that we are fully capable of replacing human organs with animal equivalents. This capability represents the here and now. We’ve already done it.

It stands then that if there once existed an advanced civilisation in deepest prehistory, they too would have had the capability of doing such things. Perhaps they even went further and didn’t stop at simply transplanting animal organs into people. Perhaps their curiosity got the better of them. Maybe they took this genetic engineering beyond all moral and ethical limits to create terrible hybrid species of the sort described in the writings of Berosus.

Is Mankind as we know it today simply the result of a bizarre genetic experiment carried out by life from another galaxy?

We can laugh all we want but the fact is that with our current rate of progression science will again be able to create these hybrid monsters of antiquity. There is nothing to stop us except our own conscience, but as history has shown, this has never been an impediment.

ANCIENT TEXTS

The fact is that even the most cursory study of ancient texts shows that reference to this idea of hybrid creatures is never hard to find. We see it in the Minoan legend of the minotaur, that was half bull and half man. We see it in the legend of the Unicorn, and the winged horse Pegasus. We also see it graphically immortalised in half-human mixtures like the famous sphinx of Egypt.

Across the Mediterranean in Greece the sphinx was an even more complicated creature which possessed the head and breasts of a woman, the body of a lion, and the wings of a bird. The ancient Greeks also believed in the legend of the Chimeras, which were composite monsters constructed of “incongruous parts”. This was said to have been the head of a lion, the body of a goat and the tail of a serpent. In plain language nothing that the science of the future will find too difficult to duplicate.

There are even those who go further and say that Mankind himself is the result of an alien experiment. In short we are the product of a long term project, frequently altered and manipulated and sown on this planet like seeds in a vast terrestrial garden.

As a theory of our origins this is fast gaining converts. Best-selling authors such as Erich Von Daniken, and George Adamski are almost insistent on this point. They highlight the fact that loopholes in our ideas on human evolution, particularly the famous missing links are only explainable by the fact that the answers must lie in the hands of an influencing power.

The certain truth is that out of the blue our species arose from being little better than an animal, to one capable of travelling to another planet. And remember that ecologically this occurred over a time period that is barely more than a blink of the eye. Instead of evolution we have world of species that to all intents and purposes appear to have been created instantaneously in full corporeal identity. Significantly this is just the way that ancient texts like the Bible say it happened. In other words each living thing was a separate creation.

The ability to manufacture,
transplant,
and combine genes is at the heart of a potential catastrophe that threatens the entire human race with a biological doomsday.

What was the special force given to humans that sets them apart from the animal kingdom and more importantly, where did it come from?

ALIEN INTERVENTION

Faced with this reality it seems certain that our species was at some point in its development impregnated with special qualities that set him apart from the animals. Some see this as the hand of God and others as the intervention of aliens. The fact is that it happened.

In his book Return to the Stars best-selling author Erich Von Daniken puts things into the following context: "I think it likely that unknown cosmonauts brought with them to our Earth branches of knowledge of the kind we are now acquiring and that they made our ancestors intelligent by their manipulation of the genetic code."

Elsewhere Von Daniken talks of this manipulation extending to the very heart of our ageing process. Curiously in all the ancient records such as the Bible, people were living out fantastic lifespans. This was originally explained as an error in their counting of the years, but detailed study of these manuscripts show this not to be the case. A year in the Bible is just as long as the year we know today. Yet people of that time were living five to nine hundred years.

Von Daniken amongst others explains this in terms of a malignant aging virus that was deliberately sent to make our days shorter. If so it was put there a very long time ago.

Now the mysteries of ageing are at last being unravelled. Breakthroughs in our understanding of degenerative cell damage mean that we can once again look forward to much longer lifespans. In fact Michael Rose, professor of evolutionary biology at the University of California says "There is no limit to the potential life of human beings". He also insisted that eventually with this new understanding people could easily live out lifespans of four hundred years or more. On the face of it this may all seem like a cheerful development. After all, living out indefinite lifespans does have attractions, but tampering with the genetic code can be dangerous. It's rather like fiddling with the registry of a modern day computer. Mix up the messages and you finish up with an insoluble crisis.

Perhaps this is what happened thousands of years ago, in the days of the monstrous hybrids. Perhaps the scientists of the day didn't know where to stop and brought on themselves a biocatastrophe of epic proportions. This would be all too possible as changes in our biological make-up could also introduce lethal viruses capable of wiping out all living matter. As one Harvard scientist observed: "The ability to manufacture, transplant, and combine genes is at the heart of a potential catastrophe that threatens the entire human race with a biological doomsday."

Who says events don't move in cycles?

THE ORIGINS OF OUR SPECIES

As more and more UFO sightings go on record and as more evidence is collated, one question keeps coming to mind – why are the aliens here? Chris Kenworthy investigates.

At some point in prehistory, did alien races seed Earth with modified DNA designed to produce intelligent life?

On the surface it would appear that aliens have only turned up in recent decades, perhaps taking an interest in our new technology and the advancement of our civilisations. However, the study of ancient texts, including the Bible, could indicate that aliens have been visiting Earth for centuries. According to some theorists they could have been coming here since the dawn of time. The most unusual theory is that aliens are actually responsible for the existence of humanity.

Nobody can be certain where life originated or where the first DNA strand evolved. It could have formed on Earth, in a chemical soup, by chance. Other people, however, prefer to think it came from space, inside a comet. Or it could be that an even older civilisation from elsewhere in the galaxy, deliberately seeded planets with DNA to help start life. The remains of a civilisation seen at Cydonia on Mars, could give a clue to our ancestry. Perhaps Mars was once rich in life but experienced global warming and as life ceased, the seeds of existence were sent to Earth.

Such ideas are disturbing because they imply that humans are nothing more than an experiment or a compromise. If true however, it could be that we are much more than an experiment, but that we haven't seen how we fit into the larger picture.

Why though, when science has fully explained Man's evolution, should we believe that aliens were involved? It seems like an unnecessary fantasy, confusing the known facts. In truth human evolution hasn't been fully explained. Although we are taught that Man evolved from more basic life forms, there is remarkably little evidence to show that this is the case. Evolution is by no means a watertight theory, which has led some people to believe that aliens must have been involved, shifting evolution along.

ALIEN INTERVENTION

Is it possible that the vision of 2001: A Space Odyssey is true; that evolution was forced upon us by alien intervention. One theory is that evolution does occur, but in a slow and basic way and that for the sudden appearance of man, genetic engineering must have taken place. It is postulated that a monolith of some kind, perhaps a pyramid, was put on Earth to shift ape DNA slightly, helping to bring about the evolution of man. Or it could be that aliens abducted ape creatures and directly manipulated their DNA, to create 'instant' humans.

Again this might sound like a wild theory, until you consider the fact that sudden shifts in species are known to occur, though there is no explanation of why this happens.

Darwin's theory of evolution states that organisms produce offspring which are slightly different to their parents. Natural selection favours the survival (and hence breeding) of individuals whose improved features (such as better eyes, or sharper teeth), enable them to survive. So by chance mutation, Darwin believed that creatures gradually improved at random and were then preserved, by being more fit for survival. It sounds convincing, but may not be the full story.

Although experiments show that changes can occur, these are usually within a species, a form of micro-evolution. So a fruit fly may change in hundreds of ways, from generation to generation, in terms of wing shape, eye colour and so on – but no matter how it mutates, it is still a fruit fly. Darwin thought that species could gradually change into new species, but this doesn't seem to be the case. The fossil record should show many slight gradations between old species and new ones, but this isn't so. When Darwin observed this he said it was, "the gravest objection to my theory". He assumed that better research would reveal more fossils, but today, that still hasn't happened. According to the evidence, something forces species to shift suddenly from one form to another. It could be possible therefore that life developed on Earth but that something – perhaps aliens – continually shifted its development to more advanced forms.

In many ways, this seems plausible, because the idea of gradual evolution is quite ridiculous. How could it be for instance, that we could develop eyes in gradual stages. Half an eye, or part of a feather, is useless; only the complete forms are worthwhile. This being so, why would natural selection preserve transitional organs? It wouldn't. It should also be noted that the fossil record shows no evidence of transitional forms, where organs are gradually changing.

FOSSIL EVIDENCE

The fossil record shows that species do not appear gradually, but appear fully formed, as though their development has been guided or engineered. About 550 million years ago, during the Cambrian era, a wide variety of complex life forms appeared at once. So dramatic was this change that it is referred to as the Cambrian Explosion. These complex life forms (jellyfish, trilobites and molluscs) do not appear to have ancestral species; it is as though they came from nowhere. This suggests that something took the basic DNA of Earth and manufactured new species.

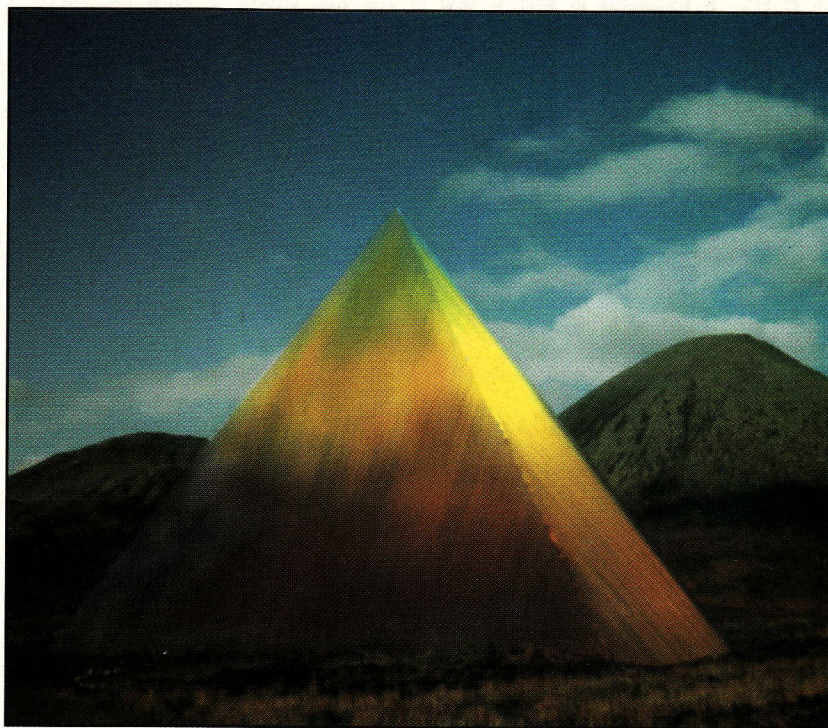

This isn't the sort of evolution they teach you at school and flaws in the Darwinist theory are generally kept quiet, but there is no avoiding this issue. Although the idea of alien intervention may seem extreme, science itself has no full explanation for the sudden shifts in evolution.

Perhaps the most dramatic appearance of a new species, was man. Although we often see charts showing man evolving from ape, through various stages of hominid to modern man, these are a myth. Despite extensive research, there remains a missing link between man and earlier species. Evolutionists believe that the missing link will be found and that we will discover fossils showing a type of species connecting Man ancestrally to earlier species. Unfortunately for them, this may not be the case. As some researchers have pointed out, there isn't so much a missing link, as a whole missing chain.

Although Man has obvious similarities to other creatures such as monkeys, the dramatic developments which happened in a very short time are unlikely to have happened by chance. The size of our brain, which makes us capable of complex thought, is unnecessary for simple survival. The excess of brain power which gives us potential beyond our basic needs, is puzzling. If you study the fossil record, it looks as though somebody took basic ape DNA and created man. This may be disturbing, but it fits in with the facts. Otherwise, why have we stopped evolving? If evolution really does occur as the Darwinists say, why hasn't modern man evolved again? How could it be that all these changes could take place, and then stop?

REVELATIONS

One possibility is that man evolved elsewhere, in a way that we cannot understand, because it is different to the way life operates on Earth. It is possible that we were either seeded from Mars, or that ancient civilisations travelled here directly in escape ships, losing their technology on crash landing. Perhaps more likely is the idea that the aliens have nurtured and engineered life for thousands of years. If, as some people suggest, they can travel through time, they could potentially skip through history, coaxing the entire evolution of our world within their own life spans.

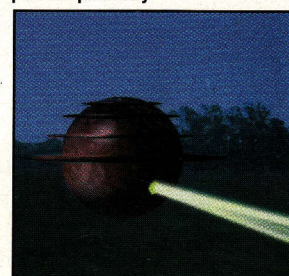

This could help to explain why the abductions are occurring now. They are happening because they have always happened from time to time. They go on because the aliens are monitoring their experiment. Or perhaps they are even moving the experiment up a stage. As abductions escalate to astonishing numbers, they could be preparing to shift our evolution again.

If this is true, there may never be a moment of revelation. We all expect the aliens to land on the White House lawn and we expect a revelation of their purpose, but it may never come. If we are created by them then like rats in a lab experiment we may never know what is going on. It is possible that the governments of the world know what the aliens are up to, but they keep quiet on instruction, to allow for man's full development. Or it could be that the governments are as much in the dark as the rest of us. Like us they know that aliens exist, but their purpose is a mystery.

Although shocking, the idea of alien-driven evolution isn't all bad. Abductions appear to be on the increase and there are rumours of hybridisation plans and alien babies being born from human mothers. If this is the case, then the next shift in our evolution could be an exciting one. We may never know in our life time exactly what is going on, if such a scheme goes according to the aliens' plans, but there are enough clues for us to make educated guesses. It could be that the aliens were last here centuries ago, giving us the ability to think scientifically and develop technology. Now that we have done that, they may have returned to help us advance again. It could be that they are now giving us creative and spiritual dimensions, to help us cope with the knowledge that awaits us.

An ancient monolith, such as this pyramid, may have been used as a catalyst to modify ape DNA into something that eventually produced humans.

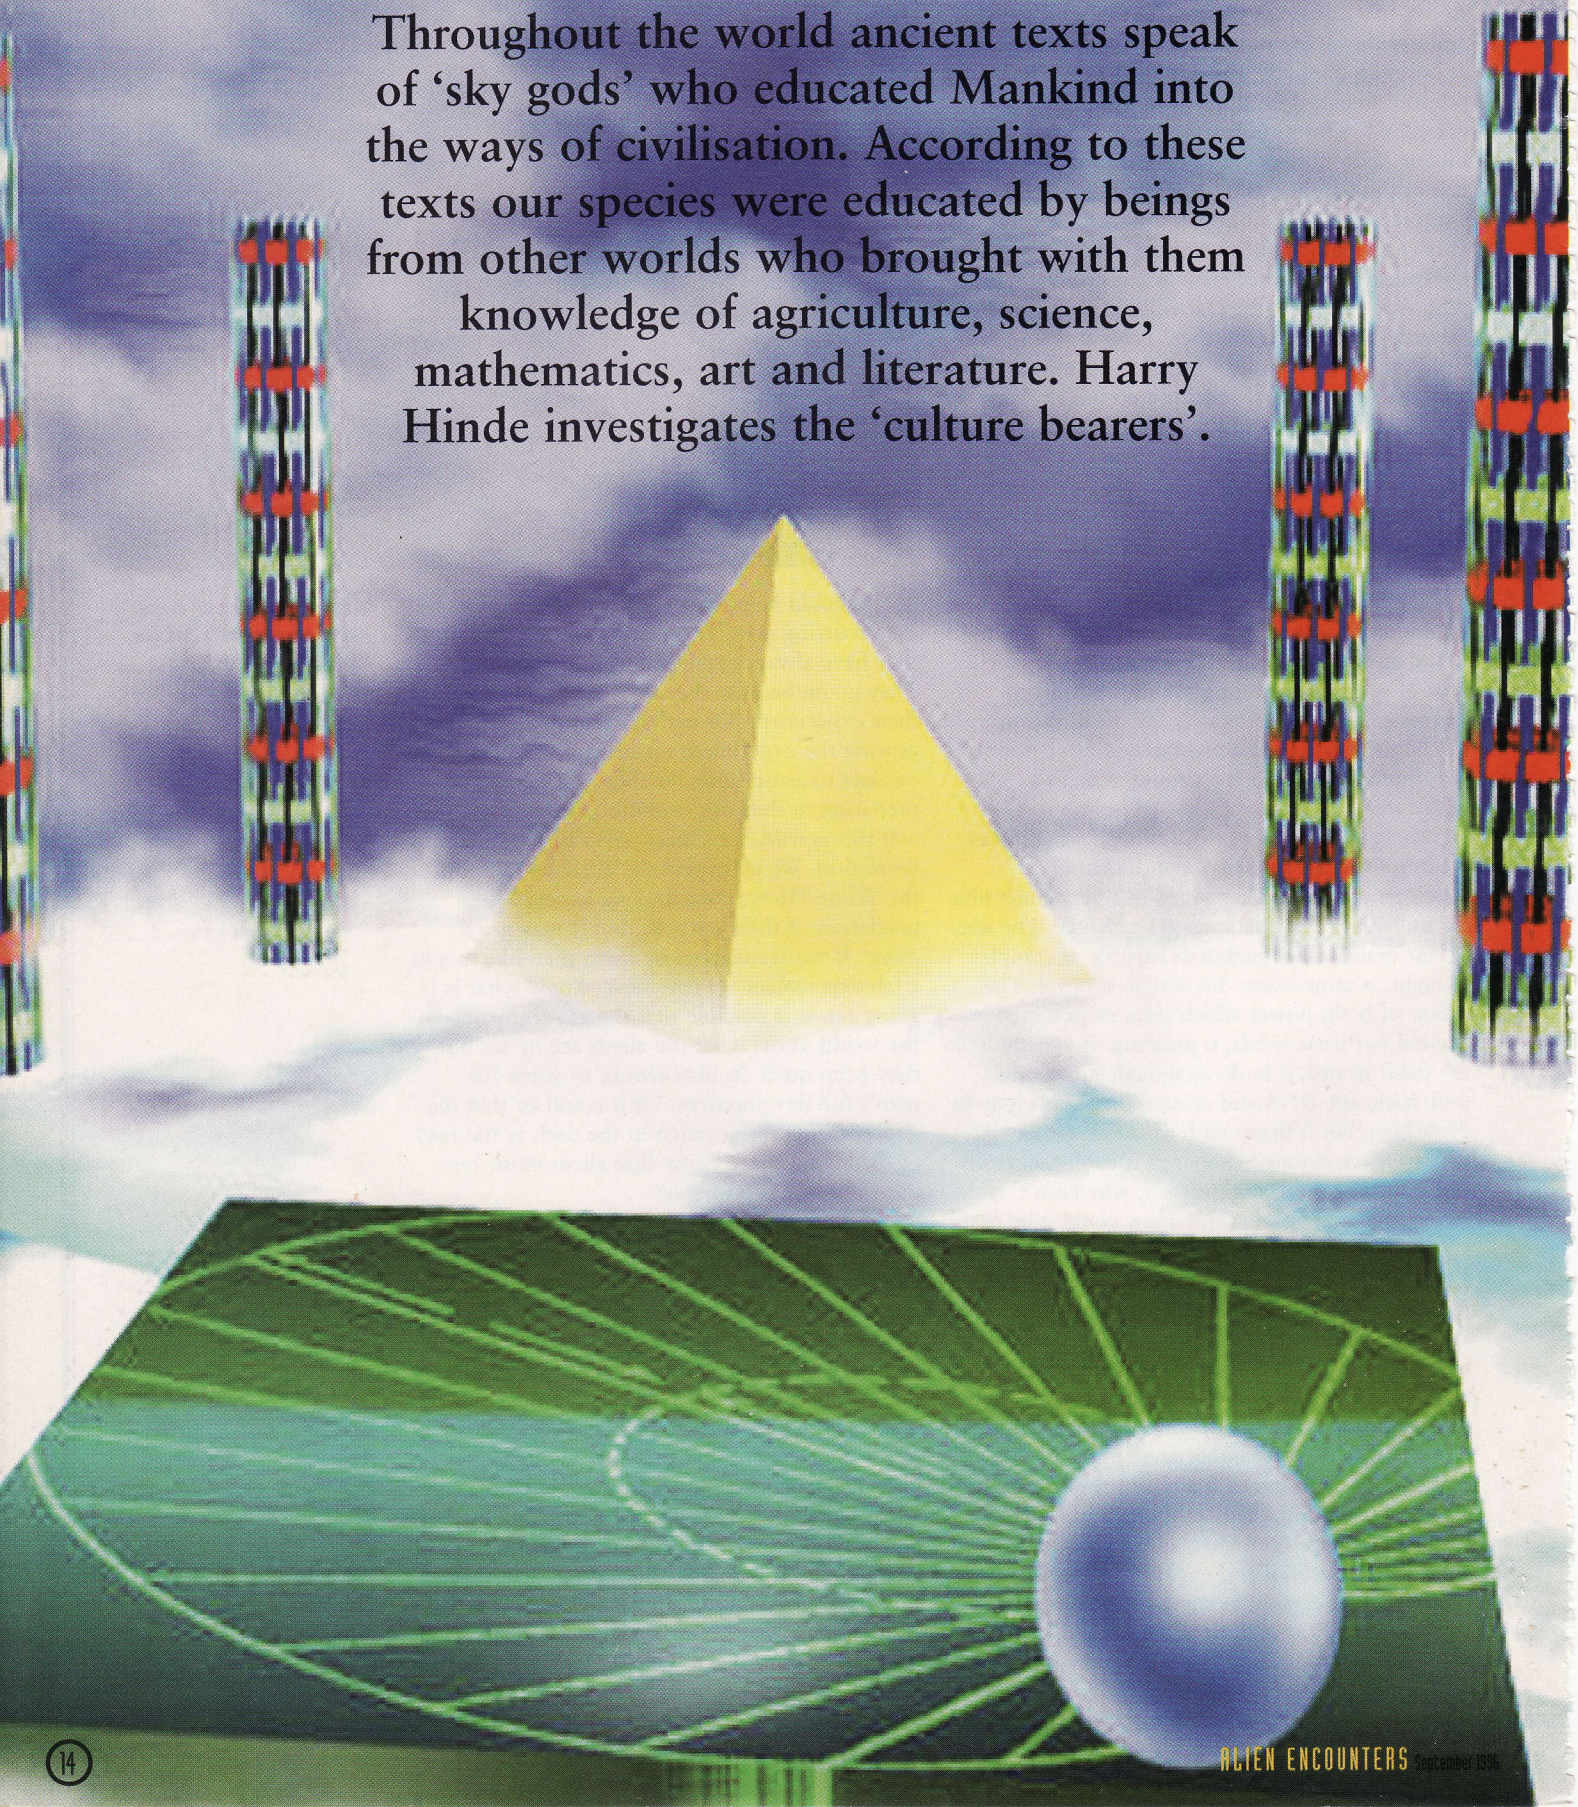

Robots may have been used to seed the planet in prehistory.

AN ANCIENT MYSTERY

Throughout the world ancient texts speak of 'sky gods' who educated Mankind into the ways of civilisation. According to these texts our species were educated by beings from other worlds who brought with them knowledge of agriculture, science, mathematics, art and literature. Harry Hinde investigates the 'culture bearers'.

We often take for granted the fact that our species rose from virtual obscurity to one capable of astonishing feats, but what was the impetus that hastened this progress? Was it purely from our own ingenuity or were we influenced, prodded and encouraged along a specific line of development? And if so, by who and for what reason?

These are important questions because they address the very essence of who we are and where we came from. The fact is that for well over a hundred thousand years Man is supposed to have existed as little more than a creature barely able to satisfy his daily living requirements. Then suddenly out of the blue civilisation arises. Even more surprising is the complete lack of any evolutionary process of development leading up to this explosion of culture. In fact wherever we see the emergence of civilisation it occurs with bewildering rapidity as if arriving fully fledged from some unidentified source.

OUTSIDE INFLUENCES

Established science has so far failed to arrive at any credible explanation for this riddle and this has led many to suggest that the answers might lie outside of our planet. According to these theories man was, at various crucial points in his history, influenced by beings from outer space. These beings carefully placed him on a specific path of development and gave help to establish mankind as an organised society.

Predictably science ridicules all notion of this connection yet in return fails to offer any worthwhile explanation. We are left then with many questions and very few answers. In particular we are faced with a repeating phenomenon, of emergent civilisations rising up as if from nowhere.

But is it really feasible for us to believe that our planet has played regular host to beings from other worlds? And did they moreover help us with our development to the extent of laying the foundation of all our arts and sciences?

It seemed to me that here was an apparently insoluble problem. Where could one go for answers? There just didn't seem a satisfactory avenue of inquiry. Then suddenly it dawned on me that perhaps the explanations were to be found by consulting with the ancient cultures themselves. They weren't around to approach them directly, but we still have their writings, and it made sense that if it's explanations we are after then no-one knew better than the ancients themselves. After all these fantastic civilisations with their marvellous monuments and sciences were the work of their hands, so who did they feel was the influence behind these amazing developments? Did they believe them to be the result of their own brilliance and ingenuity, or did they feel them to have been influenced by others?

CONSULTING THE ANCIENTS

The answer to this was truly amazing. Almost with a unified voice I found that emergent civilisations of the ancient world, whether in Mesopotamia, Egypt, Meso-America or the Andes, always attributed their sudden found knowledge and culture to benevolent aliens who arrived from either the sea or the sky. Never did

Then suddenly out of the blue civilisation arises... It occurs with bewildering rapidity as if arriving fully fledged from an unidentifiable source.

The ancient Egyptians were not the only race to attribute new knowledge to a benevolent 'sky god'.

they even attempt to attribute these accomplishments to their own skill and prowess. In Mesopotamia the Babylonians believed this influence to have come from the sea. To them a personage called Oannes was responsible for all their learning and culture. From fragments of a Babylonian historian named Berossus we find the following description contained in Robert Temple's book The Sirius Mystery: "This being in the day-time used to converse with men; but took no food at that season; he gave them an insight into letters and sciences, and every kind of art. He taught them to construct houses, to found temples, to compile laws and explained to them the principles of geometrical knowledge. He made them distinguish the seeds of the Earth, and showed them to collect fruits; in short he instructed them in every thing which could tend to soften manners and humanise Mankind. From that time so universal were his instructions, nothing has been added by way of improvement. When the sun set, it was the custom of this being to plunge again into the sea, and abide all night in the deep..."

Apparently this Oannes was amphibious in nature – at home in both sea and water. According to Berossus his appearance was both half fish and half man. This is interesting because the historians' detailed description sounds just like that of a frog-man. Additionally we find that where Oannes led the way, others followed. As Berossus puts it: "After this there appeared others like Oannes".

Accounts of other culture bearing beings of aquatic origin are also contained in the ritual ceremonies of the Dogon tribe of Mali in Africa. The Dogon say these beings whom they named the 'Nommos' (interestingly the Greek word for law) arrived from the sky and gave them special astronomical insight. The baffling truth is that this apparently unsophisticated tribe knew of an unknown companion star to the Dog Star Sirius long before it was known to conventional astronomy. The Dogon also believe the Nommos are the overseers and guardians of the universe and that soon they will again return to the Earth.

HISTORICAL USOs

The closer we look into the ancient writings the more references we find of these educating influences originating from beings who were apparently not of our species. In a fragment attributed to the historian Heladius, we find reference to a personage called Oe who comes out from the Red Sea with a fish like body but having the head, feet and arms of a man. This being is said to have possessed great knowledge of astronomy and letters.

An interesting anecdote to these accounts is the fact that unidentified objects have never just been limited to the sky. In fact USO (Unidentified Submarine Objects), are almost as prevalent. Typically these are described as spherical orbs, rather like eggs that radiate strange lights and occasionally come to the surface of the ocean.

Could it be then that after all these years Oannes and the Nommos of the Dogon have actually returned to this planet as they said they would? If so it would surely herald the coming of momentous events because it is said that whenever such contacts occur great periods of change are never slow in following.

Intervention from 'sky gods' or aliens is often quoted as the inspiration behind the proud achievements of the ancient Egyptians. Amongst other wonders, their golden period of pyramid construction combined mastery of stone with impressive mathematical and geometrical brilliance. They also loved to hide the full extent of their knowledge in the dimensions and outline of their principal constructions. But who had shown them these crafts, because once again we see the swift rise of an amazing culture that springs up with astonishing rapidity?

To the ancient Egyptians belief in the influencing hand of 'sky gods' was an all powerful impetus. It defined everything they did and believed. Here the culture bearer was known by a variety of names: 'Thoth' was widely accepted as the bringer of wisdom. They ascribed to him the invention of the sciences of astronomy, mathematics, geometry and medicine.

Another important figure in the Egyptian pantheon was Ptah. The greatest of all the gods of Memphis. Apparently his name is taken to mean 'opener' - an opener of knowledge into all handicrafts. Above all, the Egyptians regarded him as the master architect (the fashioner of the universe) whose knowledge and inspiration led to the whole magnificent programme of pyramid building.

To Osiris is ascribed knowledge of civility and manners. In his book Myths and Legends of Egypt Lewis Spence writes glowingly of his influence, "The land of Egypt flourished under his rule as never before. Like another 'hero-god' he set himself the task of civilising his people who at his coming were in a very barbarous condition, indulging in cannibalistic and other savage practises. He gave them a code of laws, taught them the acts of husbandry and showed them the proper rites wherewith to worship the gods. And after he had succeeded in establishing law and order in Egypt he betook himself to distant lands to continue there his work of civilisation."

We see here that the definite understanding is that Osiris's mission was not just confined to Egypt but was pan-global in its aims and intentions. For instance, far away from Egypt in Central America the story of Quetzalcoatl is another perfect illustration of this civilising influence. Again we see the very sudden arrival of knowledge which brings in its wake an understanding of so many things vital to a modern civilised society.

AZTEC SKY GODS

To the Aztecs Quetzalcoatl was "giver of knowledge and all good things". In the light of his advent came knowledge of astronomy, mathematics, and architecture. All this presumably happened many hundreds of years before the Aztecs became discernible as a culture.

Throughout the emergent civilisations of the Americas we find this all-present idea of an influencing hand. To the Mexicans he was known as 'Quetzalcoatl'; to the Maya, 'Kukulcan'; and to the Inca, 'Kon-Tiki-Wira-Kocha'.

To the Kayapo Indians of Brazil this influencing personage was known as 'Bep Kororoti'. This was Throughout most ancient cultures there are references to a helping hand somehow distributing civilisation.

yet another culture bearing being who arrived from the skies. On this occasion he came carrying a "thunder weapon" capable of causing great destruction. Like Oannes in Mesopotamia he gave the native people instruction and knowledge of a great many things including the planting and sewing of seeds and the improved use of weapons and handicrafts. Finally Bep Kororoti is said to have vanished into the skies to a background of "fiery clouds, smoke, and thunder".

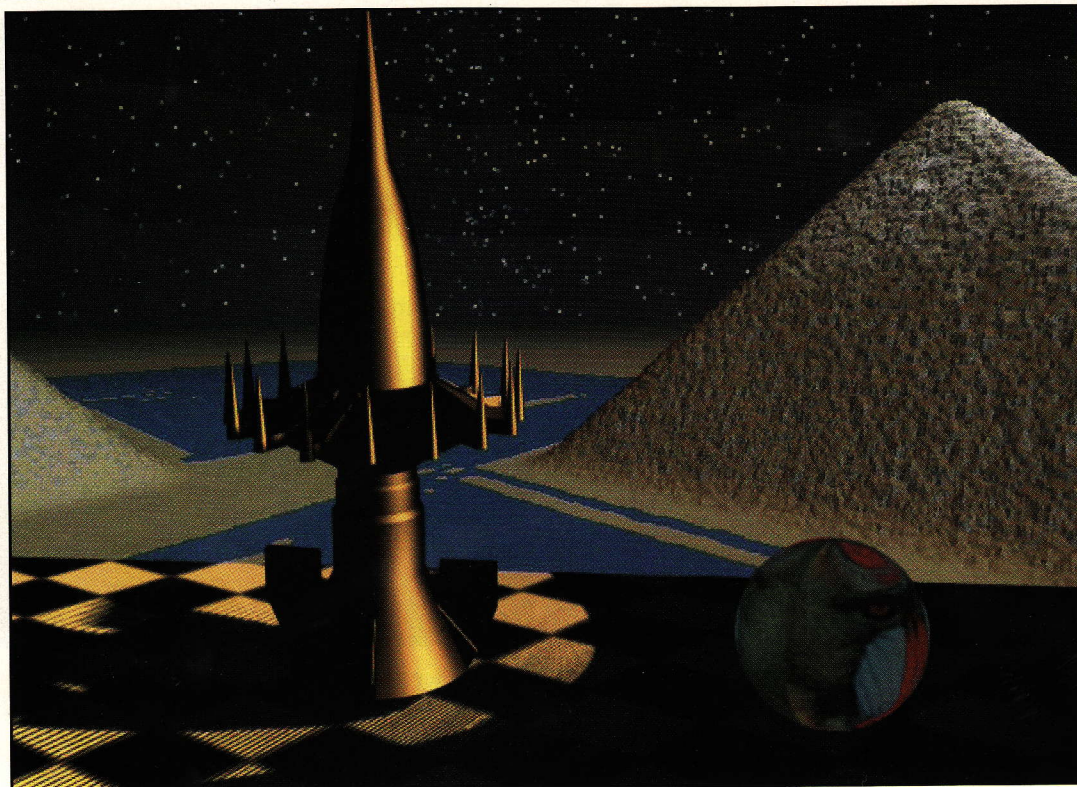

Significantly the Kayapo Indians celebrate their most sacred festivals dressed in straw garments - a duplicate of those worn by the 'sky gods' - garments that look remarkably similar in shape and design as the space suits of contemporary astronauts.

Yet another surprising discovery is that when

The Aborigines believed these ancestral beings created all
forms.

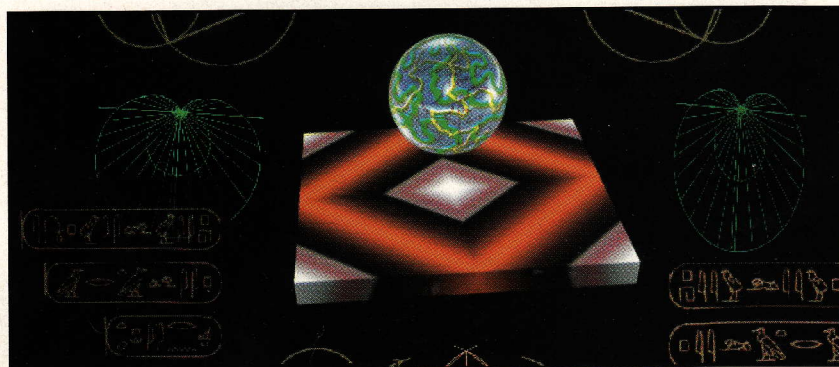

Colombus made his epic voyage to the New World, the natives of the West Indian islands believed he was a sky god. They told him of others who had descended from the heavens, bringing with them strange metal items which in some cases the natives had arranged in their huts as 'sacred relics'. These islanders believed that the sky gods would one day return and Columbus's arrival appeared to be a certain fulfilment of this long awaited promise. Across the other side of the world in Australia, the Aborigines believe that Ayers Rock is their most sacred of places. Translated in their own language it is thought to mean "cross-roads of the dream time trails". To the Aborigines this age of the Dream Time is roughly analogous to the golden age of Greek mythology – when sky gods peopled the Earth. It is from this period that the Aborigine claim to derive their intense understanding of natural and supernatural things passed down through a long line of ancestral descent. They believed these ancestral beings created all human life forms as well as "all forms of life in fauna and flora".

In his excellent book Aboriginal Myths and Legends, author Roland Robinson tells us that the Aborigines believed, "Ancestral beings created and introduced ritual and law which governs social organisation and religious observance. They gave instructions to the Aborigines in hunting and food gathering and food-preparation!"

CULTURE FOR THE FUTURE

Once again we see here the archetypal description of the culture bearing beings that in all corners of this globe are seen as having brought a crucial influence to otherwise primitive people. It would appear that wherever we go in the ancient world we find clear and unambiguous accounts of influencing beings that have shaped the entire path of human development. According to these ancient sources man was once taught great things by others who were not of his species – beings who quite literally just arrive from the sky.

Some even go as far as to say that this influence extends straight on down to this very day – that the role of the culture bearers is still far from over. And if all this seems far too implausible just imagine that barely one hundred years ago the thought of man travelling to the moon or routinely flying thousands of miles in a couple of hours would have seemed entirely preposterous. In fact these last eighty or so years have seen an unimaginable explosion of knowledge and science. The question is what hastened this development? Was it really our own brilliance, or were we in some way helped – either consciously or subconsciously by beings who have been gently prodding us in a certain direction for countless millennia?

ALTERNATIVE THEORIES

Are these visitors truly from outer space? If so how can they possibly accomplish the travel involved and conquer the distances with all the problems with fuel and time?

The following features explore the possibilities of conquering the fuel problem with revolutionary ideas for generating energy, also drawing new conclusions that the aliens are in fact from another dimension, possibly the same realm witnessed by people experiencing near death experiences. Chris Kenworthy ponders on the possibility of living aliens and asks new questions...

COLD FUSION

Energy production is one of the most important and far-reaching issues for Mankind. It could have profound implications in any number of different areas. Chris Kenworthy looks into a matter that has divided the scientific community.

A few years ago, most scientists didn't think there was much chance of aliens existing. Despite the vast size of the universe, they said that the conditions required for creating life were too unusual, and asserted that humanity was unique. Even planets, they said, were a rare, chance occurrence. In the past few years, evidence to the contrary has been mounting. It now appears that planets may be as common as stars, and that life may be so prevalent it is almost an inevitable aspect of physics.

Although scientists admit that alien life may exist, few accept that UFOs are visiting Earth, or that aliens have any way to reach us. The argument against alien visitation is that travel from the stars would take years. Even if it was possible to develop a theory of travel involving space warping, or gravity bending, finding the energy for such a technique would be almost impossible.

Ironically, a group of maverick scientists have recently made a new discovery which could break down this latest myth. They are developing a form of energy production which borders on the paranormal. Cold fusion, it is said, could be such a powerful form of energy that it could be used to drive interstellar spaceships and warp drives. It is quite possible that in a few brave laboratories around the world, scientists are finally coming to terms with the possibility that the future shown in Star Trek may soon be with us.

This may indicate why alien visitors have been taking such an apparent interest in us in recent years. Although UFOs have been observed for centuries, the major sightings have taken place since was producing excess energy, creating an illusion of free energy. It was possible that contaminated equipment and materials, and bad experimental technique, could combine to create flutters of energy, which would confuse accurate research.

In recent years, it has been shown that chemistry is not responsible for causing cold fusion. For a chemical reaction to take place, fuel must be consumed, but that is not the case. The cells used for cold fusion consist mostly of water, which cannot undergo a chemical reaction that would produce excess heat. The cells do contain metals which may produce chemical heat, but this is only a tiny amount.

Cold fusion is so efficient, it cannot be explained by chemical reaction. If you burn 2000 grams of petroleum, you will obtain 86 joules of energy as a result, and yet a cold fusion cell, containing just 40 milligrams of metal, produced 86 megajoules of energy. Put simply, this means that a cold fusion cell is thousands of times more efficient than petrol. This in itself contradicts known science. Using the 'chemical' explanation to dismiss cold fusion is ridiculous, because it proposes that metal and water are somehow more potent than petrol. The implication is, of course, is that the metal and water combination isn't a fuel at all; it is more of a trigger for a completely new form of energy.

MORE FUEL YOU

We all know that fuel runs out. As you take energy from it, it is used up and produces pollution. That isn't the case with cold fusion cells. No cold fusion experiment has ever shown signs of the cell running out of energy; the power seems to be limitless, with no fuel used up and no pollution. It's as though the energy comes from nowhere. Some people have suggested that this may be the case, in that the energy comes from another dimension.

Could the engine room of a spacecraft powered by cold fusion processes look like this?

Quantum physicists believe that there is no such thing as empty space, because the universe is a seething mass of potential particles and waves. It could be that the combination of effects in cold fusion somehow taps into this zero-point space. By decoding and restructuring the most basic aspects of the universe, we may have access to powers that are immense. In theory, this energy would be limitless, giving us the ability to control time and space. It could be possible to manufacture the material we wanted, even gold, or more exotic elements. Astonishingly, this type of alchemy has already been noticed in some cold fusion experiments.

If cold fusion can extract energy from zero-point space, the potential is literally infinite.

Cold fusion technology may prove to be the key to manufacturing our own UFO technology.

Cold fusion won't only provide the energy for our flying saucers, but will also produce the materials they are made of.

In several experiments the metal cathode (loaded with hydrogen or deuterium), has undergone transformation. The metal is directly transmuted into other elements and isotopes. It could be that, being so basic in quantum structure, hydrogen allows this type of transformation. Whatever the reason, the results are astonishing, with the new elements sometimes being heavier, and sometimes lighter, than the host metal.

If the aliens have access to cold fusion, as seems likely, this could explain why their craft are said to contain exotic materials. There have been reports of obscure metals, plastics and ceramics being present in UFO debris, which are beyond our technology. It's quite likely that a cold fusion alchemy could be used to create these. There are many elements which are difficult to synthesise under any conditions, and can only be produced for fractions of a second, with vast amounts of energy. When cold fusion is fully understood, we may be able to make stable versions of these elements, which can be used for new types of manufacturing. If this is the case, cold fusion won't only provide the energy for our flying saucers, but will actually produce the materials they are made of.

As with all aspects of cold fusion, sceptics aren't convinced. They believe that the apparent alchemy is the result of using impure metal from the outset. The cold fusion experts deny this, showing evidence for transmuted metals which are present in amounts from ten to one hundred times greater than all the impurities in the metal.

In many ways, cold fusion reflects mystical traditions, because the organisation of materials is as important as the materials that are used. It is as though combinations of space, shape and materials are required for cold fusion to work. It takes a great leap of imagination, and scientific courage, to tackle the problems. Only when holistic thinking is applied, with recognition of the importance of organisation, can results be seen. A few people are beginning to suggest that cold fusion cells should be constructed according to the rules of sacred geometry. They say that when the components are thus arranged, it will be possible to tap into the zero point space with ease.

There is a darker side to all this. If cold fusion is as powerful as we think, it will have many dangers. There have also been rumours of explosions in laboratories, in which people have been killed while working on cold fusion. Some people believe that perfecting cold fusion may be dangerous, because when the energy of space is tapped correctly, the results are catastrophic. It may be that the aliens are here to save us from ourselves. Or it could be that the aliens are hastily learning about our advancements in technology, because they fear us.

The first country to perfect cold fusion will have immense power over other nations, and may be able to create an ultimate weapon. Theoretically, this could be capable of destroying a country, or even a planet. When that time comes, we might be equipped for interstellar war, which might be why the aliens are taking an interest in us. They want to monitor our progress in this new form of science, in case we become a threat to them.

The truth about cold fusion should become clear within the next decade. When it becomes a practical source of power, we will be one step closer to contacting the aliens. If they won't make themselves known to us, cold fusion will give us the chance to climb into our own flying saucers, and go looking for them.

ORGONE ALIENS

UFOs exist. There is too much evidence for this to be denied, but we do not know what these Unidentified Flying Objects are.

The most common assumption is that they are structured craft, piloted by grey aliens. This might not be the whole story. Chris Kenworthy feels that the lights and shapes we see in the sky might be the aliens themselves.

Build-ups of orgone energy can occur anywhere, at any time, but areas along ley lines are the most susceptible. Ancient Roman roads frequently followed the paths of these lines.

Human perception is based on interpretation. We cannot perceive anything without comparing it to something else, fitting it into a bigger picture. It is theoretically possible, therefore, that our perception of metallic flying saucers comes about because we have no other way of interpreting UFOs. The modern perception of flying saucers only came about once we had created our own flying metallic craft. Until then, UFOs were perceived as anything from gods to burning birds. Could it be that UFOs have always been the same, but our way of perceiving them has now changed?

If the UFOs are flying aliens, like some obscure form of airborne whales, is it possible that we could perceive them in abnormal ways? There is even the possibility that such creatures might give off radiation which could disturb our minds, thus creating many of the symptoms associated with UFO sightings and abductions.

People who believe in UFOs as sky creatures, rather than alien ships, feel that the creatures are at home on Earth. They are not aliens in the usual sense of the world; they are simply rare sky animals, normally obscure to us.

Despite the bizarre nature of this belief, there is a great deal of evidence to support it. The theory of Orgone Energy which, although not a part of conventional science, could help to explain where these flying bioforms come from.

An Austrian scientist named Wilhelm Reich discovered a form of energy which he called 'orgone'. This he believed was the force that gave life to the universe, and could also be responsible for the sky creatures.

Reich was known for his psychological studies, but after a while he turned his attention to the study of organic decay. He filmed moss and grass disintegrating, noting the way they broke into blue-green vesicles. He saw that when materials are allowed to disintegrate in a nutrient solution, they swell to form these vesicles, which he called bions. Although his findings are not backed up by conventional science, he was certain that these 'bions' were a source of life, spontaneously forming into amoeba and protozoa. He believed that the force of organic matter was somehow the source of life. In recent years, the spontaneous appearance of form from chaos has become more widely accepted. It could be that Reich had discovered an aspect of chaos theory years before its time, by seeing the life force at work.

While working with bion preparations, Reich obtained a deep tan, and found that his lab coat glowed in the dark. A classical physicist assured Reich that his experiments could not be forming radiation, but he couldn't ignore the evidence before him. It was this energy, produced by life itself, that he came to call orgone.

Orgone is a subtle form of energy, a combination of wave forms and radiation, that is created by all living things. It is somewhat akin to The Force mentioned in the Star Wars movies; it is created by life, and in turn gives power to life. It cannot be detected by conventional means, but can be perceived by those want to know more. It could be a source of many paranormal activities, including UFOs.

ORGONE DONOR

It is said that orgone is created by the interaction of sunlight with living tissue. This creates bions, a sort of biological ether. This ether, which clings to living tissue, is thought to be responsible for consciousness and memory. Conventional science has never found a full explanation for consciousness, and continues to ignore Reich's discovery of a supernatural energy which could be responsible for keeping us alive. This energy could be the force that transforms us from bundles of atoms into living, thinking beings.

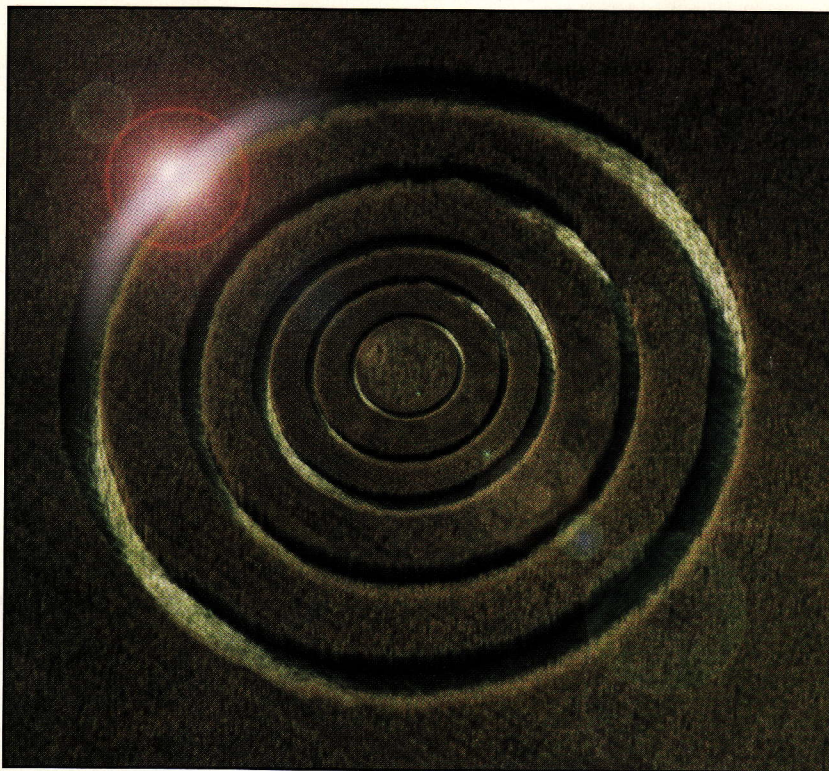

As well as being attracted to organic materials, Reich discovered that orgone tended to settle into special boxes that he created. These were lined with metal, and contained alternating layers of organic and metallic material. These structures are now referred to as orgone accumulators, and experiments have shown that they are capable of raising temperatures, and attracting light forms. They can be any size, from a few inches across, to something much larger.

It has been suggested in recent years that ancient sites, such as stone circles, may be orgone accumulators. Silbury Hill, in Wiltshire, for instance, was constructed in segments and layers. Archaeologists have never been able to explain why the ancients went to such lengths structuring the inside of a hill that would never be seen. Is it possible that the ancients knew about orgone, and were building the hill to accumulate orgone? It could be that ley lines, which align the sacred sites, are part of a gridwork of energy, fuelling the planet. It is widely believed that such a grid exists, and that it is natural in origin, but that it has been further empowered by the building of ancient sites.

Structures such as Stonehenge and Avebury, along with other stone circles, standing stones, burial mounds and tumuli might be similar to the components of a circuit board, regulating a previously unknown energy.

People who visit ancient sites often have experiences that would be expected from coming into contact with orgone energy. There are reports of dizziness and nausea. Photographic film often fogs, and batteries in cameras drain. People taste something bitter and metallic, and there are reports of heightened awareness, headaches and memory loss. It is known that orgone can create these effects, indicating that ancient sites do attract and regulate orgone energy.

If these ancient sites are orgone accumulators, this might hint at why so many paranormal events occur around them. Either the orgone affects the human mind, making us falsely perceive ordinary events as being strange, or the energy might rip at normal reality, allowing ghosts, black dogs, fairies and UFOs to be seen.

If we accept that UFOs are a form of flying life form, then it would be fair to expect them to be attracted to our ancient sites, perhaps to feed on the accumulated energy. Many Ufologists have observed the way that UFOs are frequently seen close to ancient sites, but this has been difficult to explain. The orgone theory would make it clear. Our ancient sites could be feeding grounds for orgone bioforms.

Might orgone energy be responsible for the formation of crop circles?

One possible explanation for UFOs causing car engines to fail might be that they are being overloaded by a localised concentration of orgone energy.

Where, though, might these bioforms come from? The evidence collected so far indicates that these creatures exist in the upper atmosphere, only rarely travelling down towards Earth where they become visible. This explains why UFO sightings are rare, but not unknown.

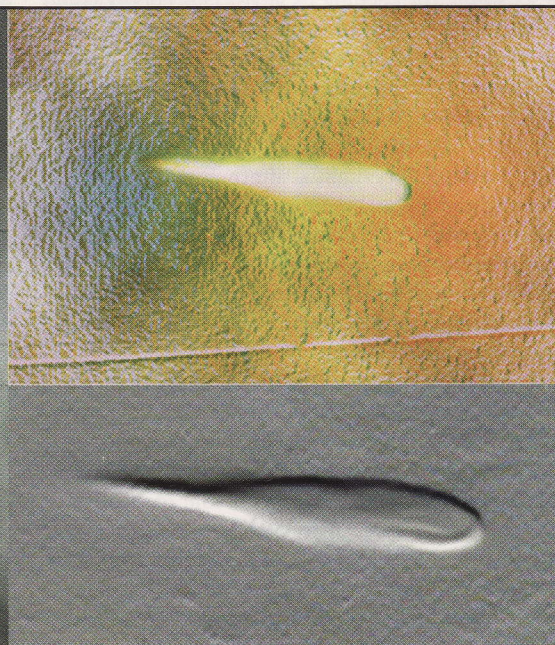

The upper atmosphere is the most likely home for these creatures, because it is rich in orgone energy. As all life on the planet gives off orgone energy, it is collected in the magnetic fields of the upper atmosphere. Although much of it remains on Earth, especially in the grid of ley lines and ancient sites, a large amount collects in the highest part of the Earth's atmosphere, almost in space. We can think of this upper atmosphere as being like another ocean. It is rich in chemicals, orgone and electromagnetism, so it isn't unreasonable to expect life to form there. That life may be different to the life we are familiar with, but it isn't beyond our comprehension. After all, whales are completely different to us, floating and swimming through water in an environment that is just as alien to us as outer space. It doesn't take a great leap of the imagination to understand how other creatures could exist in the highest part of the atmosphere.

Reich observed spontaneous life emerging from orgone on earth, so it is likely the same would happen in the upper atmosphere. Such life would have to be lightweight, to avoid falling to earth, more of a gaseous mass than a solid creature. These amoeba-like masses, or bioforms, would be invisible, feeding on electromagnetism and the surrounding orgone.

The orgone aliens might only come down to Earth to feed, topping up on their reserves of energy. This would explain why they are attracted to power stations, ancient sites and fault lines.

Computer enhancement of this UFO picture reveals an amorphous shape as opposed to a solid hull.

Many researchers have assumed that UFOs are nothing more than ball lightning or some other meteorological effect, due to the way they are often seen in areas linked to electrical power or geological faults. It is possible however that UFOs are seen in these areas because they are attracted to the sites, as feeding or breeding grounds.

These bioforms, which are normally invisible, might become visible when they approach Earth, because of the lower magnetic frequencies which occur here. This is why we see them as physical objects, or glowing lights at night. This would also explain why 'ball lightning' is seen to move in an intelligent way; because it isn't lightning at all, but a living, flying creature.

UNIDENTIFIED FLYING ORGONE-ISMS

If orgone sky creatures do exist, they could be responsible for the majority of UFO sightings. Many observers say that UFOs are organic and flexible, rather than stationary. They have been seen floating over roads, at close range, and are sometimes said to be more like a gas or ball of glowing light than a solid. Such observations may be more accurate than the clichéd flying saucers that witnesses describe. It's quite possible that when people see orgone aliens, they perceive them as spaceships due to their inexplicable appearance. If you study UFO reports, you will find that many contain descriptions of gas-like structures, and the shape of the 'craft' changing. Sometimes the 'ship' is described as being transparent, with strange inner workings, which could possibly mean that people are seeing the internal organs of these unusual creatures.

UFOs are often seen changing shape as they fly, which does not fit in with the concept of solid ships. Orgone aliens, however, would be flexible and could easily stretch; this might even be a part of their natural propulsion. There are also reports of UFOs flying into hillsides, or into the ground, which would be possible for orgone entities. By existing in different vibrational wavelengths, they may be able to pass through physical objects as easily as we pass through water. When UFOs disappear spontaneously, it could be that the orgone creatures are disguising themselves with a form of camouflage; by raising their frequency, they might make themselves invisible.

People who witness UFOs report experiences similar to those that occur when orgone is present, including memory loss and missing time. It is just possible that the whole UFO phenomenon has developed from the misperception of such sky creatures. Even physical interaction with apparent aliens could be down to the brain being affected by the strong electromagnetism given off by orgone creatures. This energy could also make our car engines cut out, which is something that UFOs are often said to cause.

Almost every aspect of Ufology can be explained by thinking of alien craft as alien creatures in their own right. It is even possible that crop circles are created by orgone aliens, which could explain why radiation, radio distortions, and orgone after-effects are experienced in crop circles. UFOs are often seen close to crop circles, before and after their formation. Perhaps when orgone aliens pass through fields, they leave this trace, although it is possible that the orgone aliens are trying to communicate with us through crop markings. If, however, the hoax theory proves to be true, it is possible that crop circles act as orgone accumulators, thus attracting UFOs. Many crop circle hoaxers report seeing anomalous lights, and their circles are known to produce paranormal effects. It is possible that all circles are hoaxes, but this doesn't necessarily stop them from being a potent form of orgone accumulator, attracting the sky creatures.

Crop circles might act as accumulators of orgone energy because of the nature of their shape.

UFOs have been seen on Earth for many centuries, but contact has never been made. To this date, there is no evidence of actual aliens recorded on film. We may be going about Ufology the wrong way, by thinking of UFOs as aliens from another place. In a few years, as orgone energy becomes understood more widely, science may find that the aliens are already in our midst.

Spirits in a Material World

Here follows a revolutionary new speculation on the subject of alien abduction. Philip Anthony Kinsella follows the clues in the abduction experience and believes that there may be strong links between various paranormal phenomena. His idea revolves around the premise that many abductions seem to have the qualities of Out of Body Experiences...

THE REALM OF DEATH

he baffling occurrences of alien encounters continue to multiply, yet we seem no nearer to understanding anything of these bizarre events. Scientists still maintain an air of scepticism regarding alien abductions along with sighting of unusual crafts, and Ufologists are left with the daunting task of piecing together the bulk of baffling cases which seem beyond the realm of human perception.

One possible answer which needs investigating is NDE (Near Death Experience). NDE is now becoming increasingly accepted within the medical profession and, for those who are not already familiar with this phenomena, it revolves around a clinically dead person leaving their body. This can even apply when the body is not threatened by death and an Out Of the Body Experience or OBE overwhelms an individual.

There have been thousands of such cases, especially in cardiac-arrest patients who claim that once they are beyond the state of death, find themselves in a somewhat beguiling environment. What, you may well ask, has this to do with aliens and UFOs? We'll return to this point shortly, because the experiences of those individuals who have crossed over to the other side might just have felt what it's like to be composed of almost nothing – an occurrence which, in itself, could lead credence to our alien visitors' actual reality.

The definition used by most cultures for surviving death is called 'spirit', but there is probably a more adequate meaning for its interpretation. The word 'spirit' is associated with ghosts, and 'Holy Spirit' the survival of man's physical body. Unfortunately, we have pigeon-holed such things as UFOs, ghosts, spirits, monsters and such like into slots and treat them as entirely separate phenomena. It could be that they are all connected, and if we continue to remain ignorant and catalogue everything separately, we're going to find it increasingly strenuous to form any understanding of where these anomalies come from and why they are here, though it is doubtful this will make life for researchers any easier. Why then is NDE any nearer the truth to understanding the UFO phenomena?

Taking a typical example of your classic abduction case, the individual who is being abducted apparently is able to move through walls, closed doors or windows, and in some instances is able to see themselves fast asleep in bed, experiencing some kind of OBE. "Well, how can that be?" the contactee may ask. "How am I able to stand here and see myself laying there on the bed?" Of course, the whole episode of abductions is sometimes so traumatic, the individual doesn't actually notice this oddity until much later when flash-backs occur and the screen-memory of their terrifying ordeal, (which aliens most often use to disguise the whole event by blocking the mind's ability to remember) is surfaced through hypnosis. The apparent ease with which an individual during such events can simply walk or float through a wall has not been satisfactorily explained by modern science. To perform this would have to break down the molecular structure of our anatomy and reassemble it in its correct place.

The definition for something that survives death is generally 'spirit', but this implies ghosts and may be too narrow a view to take.

The similarities between NDE's and abductions are too close for comfort. When an NDE has died and they are later revived, they speak of amazing stories of leaving their bodies, travelling through the ceiling and up towards the sky before being pulled down (or up) a long, dark tunnel where a brilliant light awaits them. No one has arrived at a satisfactory theory of who or what this light is, but it could be our image of some god-like figure. The NDE then goes on to describe a three dimensional, holographical image of their life playing backwards and forwards, and the important issues within their existence on Earth are highlighted. The light then explains telepathically that the individual has not yet fulfilled their purpose and must reunite with their physical body in order to accomplish their necessary goals. Most curiously we see that the individual does not, on most occasions, want to return to their physical body – feeling obliged to remain in this state forever. You ask someone who has experienced NDE and they'll tell you they're no longer afraid of death. Sometimes their lives are transformed – for good.

SPIRITUAL ABDUCTION?

The opposite, unfortunately, occurs when abductions take place. The individual in this instance is frightened, only too aware that something awaits onboard a ship hovering not far from their house or apartment building. Once there (having sometimes been guided by small and extremely busy 'Greys'), the individual is taken into a dim room and laid on a table where an oral examination is made. The startling similarities here indicate that, as with NDE, the person is in some kind of 'spirit-like' state.

Whether aliens have a technology whereby they can remove the non-physical self from an individual during an abduction and use it like a puppet has been of international debate for some time between experts within this field. It would make far more sense to suppose extra-terrestrials are themselves 'spirits'. Most abductees' have stated that when onboard a craft and laid on a table ready for examination, the aliens seem plastic, almost doll like both in their actions and appearance. The large, black hypnotic eyes are also a feature which begs to question the actual 'physical' reality of these beings. Over and over again in abduction cases witnesses state that they felt aliens were hiding their true identity behind the grotesque masks they wear. Their eyes hold the answer to an even more startling revelation. What could be happening here is that abductees are seeing none other than our dead.

If we think for a moment about there being some form of after-life, and medical science has in no way disproved this fact, then we might find the answer to abduction cases. What we are seeing here with aliens and their UFOs is a manifestation of 'spirit' forms breaking through the barrier of a very non-physical environment. It could be that aliens are a race of long dead subjects who, once in a state of deep, subconscious mental activity yearn for a corporeal body. They may have found a way of creating solid objects using mind control. Indeed, we can see examples of this today where psychics are able to materialise articles from thin air. UFOs, so we understand, are able to change shape instantly and operate on a level which baffle modern-day thinking. Our ancestors, the Egyptians, held in their beliefs that physical death was just the beginning of some long journey to the stars. They knew of the human body's impending doom, yet the spirit within would rise and take flight to another world where eternal life awaited them.

Aliens could have long since abandoned their 'spirit' life and are seeking a new identity. To do this they must interact with our physical environment by appearing solid themselves. This they do by wearing costumes. Why then, one may ask, do our alien friends decide to create such frightening masks which are so commonly reported in the shape of large heads, big black eyes and diminutive bodies? This might not be intentional on their part. Remember, creating something from thought is very different when it actually comes into being. The 'spirits', now in a position to free themselves from a non-physical environment, penetrate ours.

Factors such as time, colour, ageing, taste and smells have no meaning to aliens. It's as though through their suspended state within the spirit world, they have lost the significance of what physical reality actually means.

LOST SELVES

The interesting theory which might support this case is this: Scientists know that each of us have what is termed a selfish gene. This is a coded message within our DNA structure which makes you and I what we are. "I am, therefore I exist!" It is termed selfish because it individualises every one of us. In near-death experiences, people claim they are no longer individual but whole, one with everything, as though the parting of the soul separates that genetic coding sequence which is necessary for our survival here in this physical environment. Perhaps aliens look the same in appearance, rather like clones, because they no longer have that mortal DNA configuration which enabled them to be individual. Having come from 'The Other Side', and creating illusions which they can govern using mind-control (UFOs), they are eager to understand what being physical actually means. Stepping into a solid dimension, the aliens, it would appear, want to recreate themselves into actual physical beings, and this is where the hybrid breeding program comes into effect.

Things seem clearer when we discover why it is aliens seem intent in bringing this breeding program into the fore. It's obvious they themselves cannot reproduce, so they use those individuals who inhabit the physical world to help fertilise their spiritual one. Why is it, do you think, they are so adamant in trying to understand our hopes, fears, love, hate and pain? They are teaching themselves the virtues of what life in the physical world actually means. With this knowledge they could attempt to educate their new race which we have helped put into practice, preparing them for a higher level of existence.

This poses the question as to whether once we pass over, and using the hypothesis that there is some form of survival beyond the grave, we ourselves will become alien? It is an interesting theory, but there is an understanding that the classic 'Grey' alien so commonly reported nowadays is not here for the good of mankind. They, it appears, have fallen from grace and are eager to fulfil their own needs and desires, which could quite possibly indicate things are not as simple in the after-life as we are led to believe.

CROP CIRCLES

Crop circles are the enigma of the age. Despite self proclaimed hoaxers coming out of the woodwork demonstrating their wears and the means they employ to make circles, it seems the latest batch of crop circles really defy the hoaxers' talents. Two enormous formations have appeared in fields over very short spaces of time in the south and they seem to demonstrate a similar design. If they are the work of hoaxers then they certainly are a feat of human inventiveness; if they are a paranormal phenomenon then what are they trying to tell us? There is definite method to the design. Most people are amazed by the formations and many hope they are the real thing. This summer really has started with controversy and if it carries on like it has begun then we are in for a spectacular few months.

THE COMET CONNECTION

Last issue, we introduced Robert Morning Sky, a Hopi Indian from Arizona who has devoted much of his life to alien research. Morning Sky has studied crop circles as a part of his research for many years and thinks he has cracked their secret code...

The first report on the Hale Bopp comet, named after joint discoverers Alan Hale and Thomas Bopp of Phoenix, Arizona, came in August 4th 1995. The comet's apparent size led astronomers to conclude it was either abnormally large, or in the middle of an outburst.

After being cold for so long, comets become covered in volatile ice which then evaporates, so making the comet look brighter when viewed from a great distance.

After the initial discovery of the comet, however, astronomers began studying old sky photos from further out into space. In 1993 they spotted an object which was likely to be the Hale Bopp comet.

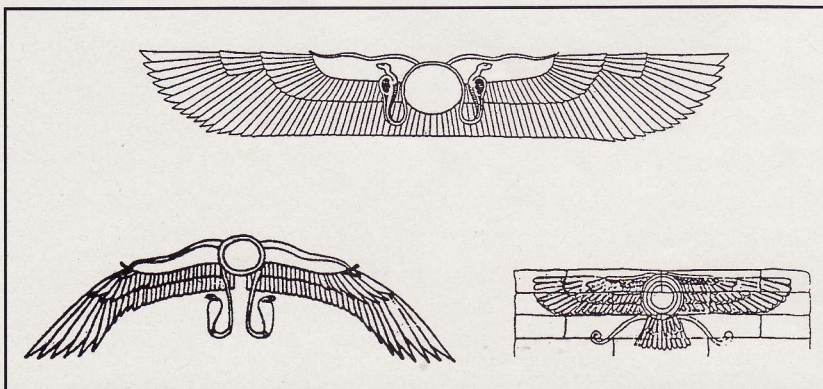

It's now believed the comet has been regularly visiting our solar system for some time, possibly every 3,000 to 4,000 years. If this is the case, then the ice has already evaporated, which means the comet is indeed very big.

The Hale Bopp comet has an object wheeling around it as it approaches, a blob of free flying debris near the nucleus. The debris has detached from the main comet and is caught in a gravitational spin around the nucleus. It is gradually heading away from the comet at a rate of one spiralling rotation a week. Hale Bopp may become the brightest comet of the century in 1997 as it is pulled into the sun's orbit.

In August the comet's nucleus was seen to fluctuate and surprisingly, an anti-clockwise spiral structure was seen within it, continually flaring up with outbursts. The object's core is estimated to be 100 to 150 kilometres in diameter. What's also strange about the comet is that its driving gas is completely unknown.

TWELFTH PLANET?

According to Robert Morning Sky, old texts indicate the Hale Bopp comet (see box-out) that's been exciting astronomers recently is something quite out of the ordinary. The writer Zecharia Sitchin talks of Sumeria, the oldest civilisation in recorded history which is 'pivotal to a heavenly body known as Nibiru' or twelfth planet (ie, nine planets, sun and moon and Nibiru). The orbital period of the twelfth planet is 3,600 years. According to Brian Marsden of the IAU centre, the Hale-Bopp comet's path "indicates that it's been regularly visiting the inner solar system, going do-si-do with the sun once every 3,000 to 4,000 years." Sitchin also states in a later work that the return of the twelfth planet would be from the regions of the constellation of Sagittarius, coincidentally the region where astronomers found the comet.

Many crop circles appear to represent heavenly bodies - if we could decode their meaning they might provide a key to our own future.

Hale saw the comet in the cluster M70 in Sagittarius. If these correlations were meaningful, could the comet be the legendary twelfth planet? After all, the surface activity of a planet would indeed resemble a spiralling action - it would appear bright from a long way away, and the driving gas would be unknown...

WINGS ACROSS THE UNIVERSE

Another argument put forward by Sitchin and supported by Morning Sky is that the famous Egyptian symbol of the winged 'sun disk' is not a depiction of the sun at all, but a representation of the twelfth planet, Nibiru. Ancient wisdom often alludes to one more planet in the solar system, a planet with an enormous orbit that the Egyptians called 'the imperishable star', or 'the planet of a million years'. According to Sitchin and Morning Sky, the winged globe was a symbol of the twelfth planet in Egyptian mythology, with the sun, or Crop circles tend to depict movement, or a spiralling action, which could be compared to that of comets.

Could it be possible that crop circles such as those shown here actually point to the coming of Nibiru, the twelfth planet referred to by Egyptians as having special significance?

'Ra', having ultimate power. Egyptologists argue the voyage of the sun god through creation might be portrayed as the flight of a winged sun-disk. All this has fascinating repercussions when we consider the Hale Bopp comet - if the ancients hold it in esteem, why did it hold so much power and significance? Perhaps the winged sun God is on its return flight.

THE CROP CIRCLE LINK

As well as heavenly objects, crop circles also appear to have a spiralling action, a spiral arm and two bodies contained within them. Robert Morning Sky links these to the comet and thinks they augur the coming of the twelfth planet. As a final twist to the tale, there is one rather ominous-looking crop circle in Wiltshire which seems to draw out the sun and all the planetary orbits up as far as the asteroid belt. The third ring has no planet and Earth is the third planet in orbit around the sun. Are the crop circles in fact a warning and if so, is this warning falling on deaf ears? We will have to wait and see...

LIFE ON MARS

NASA scientists discover a fossil of an ancient life form within a Martian meteorite which Marcus Walker believes could point to life on other planets.

es, it's official, there is life on Mars, or at least there may have been at one time. American scientists have been analysing meteors that have crashed to Earth, and now believe that the Earth is no longer the only planet in the solar system to have sustained life.

This announcement was made by a team of NASA scientists who have recently discovered the fossil of a long extinct life form. Although this life form was probably only a single-celled organism, it is still proof nonetheless that life did exist on Mars, probably billions of years ago. It is thought that the organism lived in water trapped below the surface of the planet.

NASA plan to launch their next Mars mission in November this year, and these findings will give the project a greater objective with much larger goals being set.

This latest discovery was found in a melon-sized meteorite which was uncovered in 1984 in Antarctica. The composition of the meteorite suggests that it originated in volcanic rock.

Mars is thought to have supported large amounts water, due to the now clearly evident dry river beds on the planet. The organism may have been trapped in the rock during a volcanic eruption which would have thrown the rock from the planet's surface. Alternatively, the rock could have been forced into space as the result of a direct meteor strike on Mars. Either of these possibilities would have surely resulted in the organism's death, causing it to fossilise, its outline being preserved in the surrounding rock. Monica Grady of the Natural History Museum stated, "If they have found something, then it's absolutely fascinating and has huge ramifications for us at the Natural History Museum".

The report is to be published by the American Journal of Science, however, a leaked report would appear to confirm that scientists really have discovered some semblance of a life form.

THE MEDIA AND MARS IN 1995

It would appear that Discover magazine, and especially Jack Farmer of the NASA Ames Research Centre in California, pre-empted the discovery of life on Mars back in October 1995.

Jack Farmer is the world's only full-time Exopalaeontologist, a job title he gave to himself, which basically means that he looks for life on other planets. For many years, Farmer has been attending science conferences in an attempt to convince people that there may be fossils on Mars.

Jack Farmer explained to Discover magazine that Mars was once the great hope for finding life on another planet, in fact the 1970's Viking mission objective was to find evidence of life. However, this proved to be a failure, because as Farmer points out, until now the search for life on other planets, known as Exobiology, has concerned itself with trying to find live, squirming organisms. Farmer now maintains that an attempt to find fossils is a better bet by far.

Will probes such as Voyager eventually discover living, and possibly intelligent, alien life forms?

A Viking picture of the Martian surface. This freezing and inhospitable desert may have once held water — and life.

Most researchers now believe that nothing could be alive on Mars today, but many scientists do accept that life once existed on Mars, as the planet was once a much hotter and wetter place. Farmer now believes that as we are able to find fossils on Earth, dating three and a half million years old, there is no reason to suggest that we cannot find fossils on Mars, probably dating to the same period. It is a widely held view that as life on Earth was evolving, it was entirely possible for Mars to have had the same environmental setup as us, and therefore begin to evolve at the same time. The problem is that Mars, unlike us, began to lose its heat-trapping atmosphere early on, and today its water supply only exists as ice.

COULD THIS FOSSIL BE CONTAMINATED?

Despite the celebratory noises being heard from the scientific community, there is still a small doubt that the fossil may have been contaminated. It is possible that the findings may be as a direct result of the meteorite becoming contaminated after it reached Earth.

The feeling is that an older terrestrial life may have somehow worked its way into the rock, which would have been very hot indeed after its passage through our atmosphere, and then have become trapped there as the rock cooled down and gradually hardened.

Such contamination is possible, especially as the rock would have been on the surface of Antarctica for thousands of years, exposed to the elements. The suggestion of contamination has been ruled out by Dr Grady, who states that although “thousands of meteorites have been found there, there’s never been a similar find”.

It would therefore appear that there may well have been life on Mars millions of years ago, and at last we might just have the proof, hidden away in a lump of rock and buried under the ice in Antarctica, that life did exist on Mars.

Martian volcanoes, such as these, may have been responsible for the meteorite containing the ancient fossil found in Antarctica by NASA.

THE SEARCH CONTINUES

Jack Farmer has now had his plans turned upside-down, but for better, not for worse. Instead of Farmer having to rely on finding fossils on Mars, he now has the chance to study Martian fossils, kindly delivered straight from the red planet to his doorstep, namely Antarctica. This has altered his plans slightly.

In October 1995, one of Farmer’s first major jobs was to plan a route to be taken by the Mars Pathfinder, due for launch in December 1996. The Pathfinder will parachute to the Martian surface around the beginning of July 1997, releasing a two foot long rover. Farmer’s problem was that he had to find a flat surface to allow the rover to be fully functional. Originally, this task was to be carried out by the Mars Observer, which was to have mapped the planet’s surface. However, the probe went silent in 1993, just as it entered Mars’ atmosphere, leaving Farmer to find the landing sites himself. He eventually chose an area known as Ares Vallis, an expansive plain on Mars.

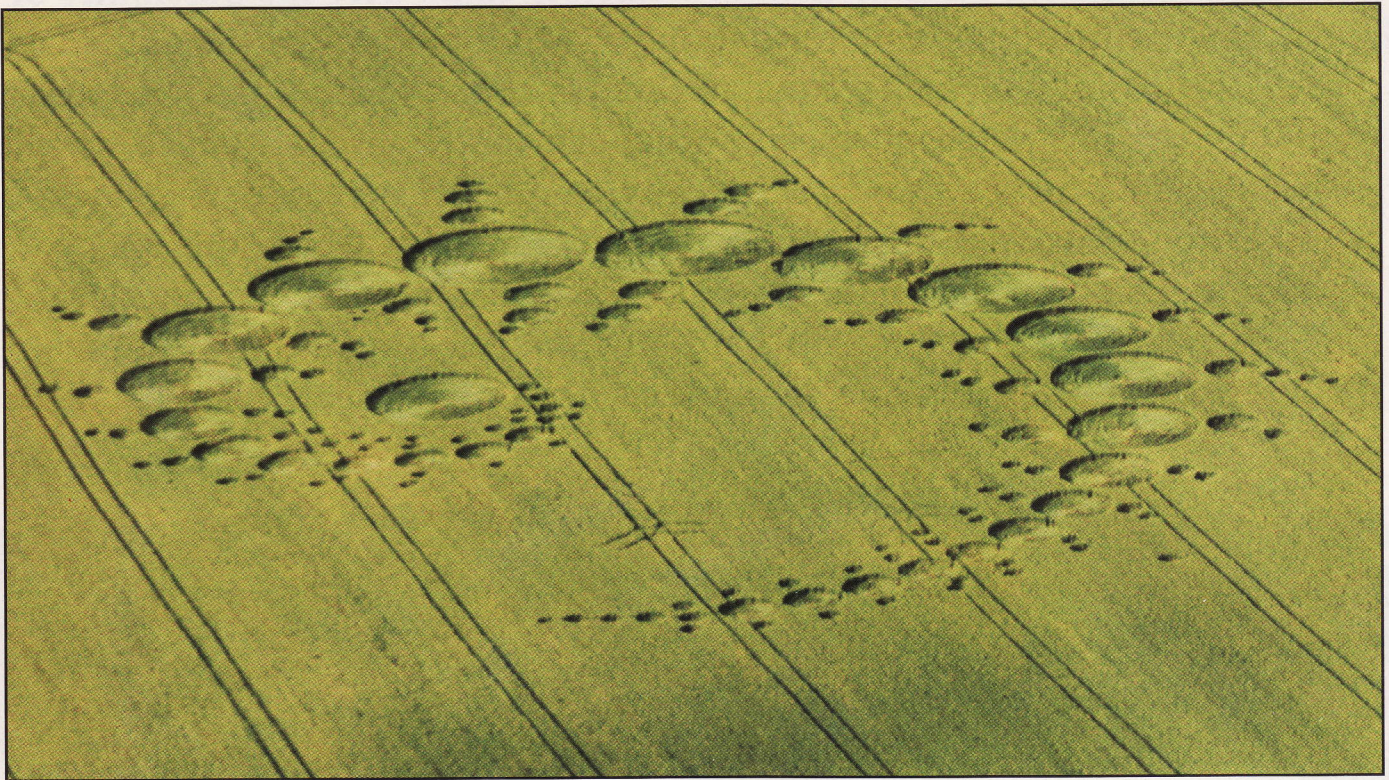

Crop circle season is back with a vengeance and the Summer has kicked off with some amazing formations that witnesses claim defy the possibility of human involvement. The first formation to rock the boat was the 650ft DNA helix formation which allegedly appeared within a few hours. The latest revelation is a formation of a spiral which has materialised in a field next to Stonehenge. There is a branch of research and belief that links ancient sites like Stonehenge to both ley lines and UFO activity. Could the age of paranormal activity truly have arrived or have the hoaxers become cleverer than ever. We – that's me, Richard, my reporter Marcus, and Al, our photographer – jumped in a car and decided to investigate for ourselves.

THE STONEHENGE SPIRAL

The circle formation that appeared alongside Stonehenge on Sunday 7th July. It could be the best evidence so far of a paranormal influence.

Russell Young works for Mrs Sandel, who owns the land where the crop circle appeared next to the A303 opposite Stonehenge. He is helping co-ordinate the floods of tourists, press and researchers who are all eager to experience the power of the circle. We spoke to him about the latest farming phenomenon.

So when and how did the formation appear? It appeared on the 7th July which was a Sunday. A pilot flew from Exeter to Thruxton at half past five and flew back to Exeter at a quarter to six. He swears that when he flew over the field the first time it was not there and when he flew back, it was. It's the first one to appear in daylight.

A pit is in the centre of every circle. Does this indicate a fake or simply mindless vandalism?

They're cropping up all over the place again aren't they, if you'll excuse the pun? There's three in the area I think.

Do you think it has any link to Stonehenge? Do you believe that it is not man made?

I would say I was sceptical. It's quite impressive but everyone is trying to find a big inner meaning to it all and I think it should just be admired for what it is.

INSIDE THE CIRCLE

Marcus talked to some women who were engaging in a strange ritual in one of the circles. They were implying that you could feel a 'vibe', a special kind of heat through the palms of their hands. However, it was a very bright sunny day and I too felt this heat on my skin, which, not surprisingly, seem to emanate from a large ball of fire in the sky! We stared at the women and then at each other in bewilderment.

They were really impressed by the circles and when we quizzed them on its origin one woman said, "I hope that crop circles remain a mystery because I like a good mystery but if they do find out the truth behind crop circles, I hope they are not man made."

It was plainly evident from the amount of people striding through the crop that there is a great deal of genuine interest in and fascination with these phenomena. If this particular circle was created by human artists then I think they should take some credit for their amazing talent, although I am not advocating the destruction of other people's property.

However, this particular formation was intriguing because of the time in which it was created – 15 minutes if the pilot is to be believed. To do this would take a very large number of people and extreme organisation. The field is next to and in plain view of a very busy road and if this many people were frantically making the formation then how is it that they were not seen? The precision in the crop formation is truly spectacular and could be witnessed even weeks after its occurrence.

THE LAND OWNER

So how did the owner of the farm feel about it all? Mrs Sandel seemed in a mixture of moods. As you often find with farmers with crop circle formations in their fields, instead of sulking about the loss of crop, they invite people to look at the formation themselves and charge a small fee for the privilege, two pounds a head in this instance. By the looks of things this must have paid off as the daily influx of crop circle enthusiasts and those who are simply curious was tremendous.

Recently however, Mrs Sandel has been a little disheartened about vandalism to the formation. She tells how a gang of 35 youths stormed the field one night without paying and how they left a terrible mess in their wake. She has also had nasty moments with angry young men who refuse to pay on the grounds that it's just a field like any other and they have the right!

However, not all is bitterness and bad news. She seems to now have a genuine interest in the crop circle and talks about the formation with pride. Some people return to the site virtually on a daily basis, such as crop circle expert Colin Andrews, who, we were informed, thinks this is a very good case for a genuine paranormal phenomenon.

CENTRE OF THE CIRCLE

When we inspected the circles ourselves we noticed that there were small pits in the centre of every circle. Instantly suspicious, we thought about the process of driving a stake into the ground and by winding a rope attached to some flattening device it would be possible to create a perfect ever decreasing swirl. We quizzed Mrs Sandel who referred back to the vandalism and disruption to the circles, saying that originally there were small clumps of crop still erect in the centres of the circles but since then they have all been pilfered by visitors leaving only these dry circular pits.

A LINK TO STONEHENGE?

Eight miles north of Salisbury, surrounded by burial mounds, Stonehenge has long been a place of mystery and ancient significance. It is estimated to be around 5,000 years old. There are many beliefs surrounding it. Firstly, it was believed to have been a place built for sky worship. It has also been linked to Druids, a type of Celtic priests but most significantly it is seen to be some kind of astronomical time keeping and prediction device.

In 1919 London's Society of Antiquaries carried out excavations for sake of finding out the history and purpose of the ancient site. It appeared that there were three main periods of building.

Around 3100BC the Aubrey holes were dug, which were a ring of 56 pits as well as a circular ditch. The second phase of construction was Marcus investigating the mysterious holes in the middle of each circle.

2100BC, pillars of rock were brought in from South Wales and two circles were erected in the middle of the site. There were 30 upright stones, each weighing an incredible 50 tons. The last stage of construction was in 1500BC. The whole complex proves that ancient people used astronomy. On midsummer's day, June 24th, if you stand in the centre of the circle you see the sun rise over the heel stone. Stonehenge is undoubtedly an instrument for the sky and a complex one. Stonehenge's symmetry is striking when viewed from above, which may lead to interesting speculation.

It is easy to see why Stonehenge captures the attention of Ufologists.

VOICES OF THE STONES

The following research is courtesy of W J Whitty, an Alien Encounters contributor, who gives clues to the deeper significance of the stones.

A zoologist investigating bats discovered that at certain times of day standing stones emit high frequency sounds in a pulsating rhythm out of the range of human hearing and only detectable with an ultra sonic detector. In 1978 the Rollright stones near Oxford were investigated. The pulsating sounds occurred around dawn every day and lasted several hours on those mornings of the Spring and Autumn equinoxes. Circles of stone were also found to create areas of ultrasonic silence within the circle when the outside levels remained normal.

Witnesses to crop circle creation are adamant that there is an electrical presence, as they witness arcs of light and hear cracks similar to the 'cracking of thunder' or an electrical discharge as Ziggy Kklyonsski quotes, "It was like a Van De Graff generator. Just before a Van De Graff fires there's that almost neon purple, which you get inside a plasma dome. You get the fields between the two electrodes which arc." Could this possibly be linked to the quartz crystal vibrations from the stones themselves?

So is the Stonehenge crop formation a genuine one? Who would dare put money on it? It seems however, safe enough to say this case is possibly the best to date for a genuine paranormal circle for the following reasons:

1. The pilots claim that it was created in fifteen minutes.
2. It was created in daylight near a thriving tourist spot.
3. The size of the formation and its precision would take a very conspicuous team of people who were not seen.
4. The formation has similarities to another recent massive 650ft formation in Dorchester which was created in a few hours and is also widely held to be a genuine formation. The link being the spiral shape.

BATTLE OF BELIEF

The trouble with crop circles is that the sceptics and the believers do not seem to trust each others' stories. We have people swearing that they know how to make the circles and also spoke to believers with testimonies to verify that it would be humanly impossible. So, as per usual, we are left with a mystery, one that may never be solved.

Still not convinced? Richard and Marcus would like to contact the pilot before verifying a paranormal influence.

BEST CASE EVIDENCE

Widely regarded as one of the best cases for genuine UFO and alien contact, the Ilkley Moor incident has gone into the annals of UFO history. A photograph of a 'little green man' is among some of the startling evidence that has come to light in this case. With so much evidence compiled, the case has attracted attention from press and UFO investigators alike.

Special thanks to Peter Hough for use of the 'alien' photograph.

ALIENS

ver since the story leaked out, back in 1987, the Ilkley Moor alien encounter has, for many people, been one of the main pillars supporting this teetering edifice that we call Ufology.

After speaking with veteran investigator Arthur Tomlinson, I was amazed by just how many details applied to this case that I had previously been unaware of. The first surprise for me was to learn that Arthur, who has been in this field of research for some 40 odd years, was the original detective on the story. Yet look this account up in numerous UFO-related books, and often you will not even see his name credited.

After speaking with several other sleuths who knew the man, I discovered that he is one of the great unsung heroes of this subject. Unlike most others, Arthur has not sought publicity, written books, and not attempted to milk Ufology for all that it is worth, (as many seem to be doing nowadays), but rather, has been quietly lecturing up and down the country, charging groups only for his petrol expenses.

A CONTROVERSIAL CLAIM

The allegation made by a former policeman (who wishes to remain nameless) was that on the morning of 1st December, 1987, whilst crossing Ilkley Moor in Yorkshire, he disturbed a small 'green' humanoid. Surprised, the creature ran along for a bit, halted when at a safe distance, turned, momentarily standing motionless, before apparently signalling by bending and raising its right arm. At this opportunity, our friend (who had gone equipped with a basic pocket camera to take pictures of the town, high from this moorland area, and a compass for navigation should the weather turn nasty) snapped a single shot, just before the startled entity rapidly scuttled towards, and around behind, a large moss-covered rock formation in the distance. Pursuing this lifeform to its hiding place, the witness was astounded to discover when he arrived at the spot, not a cowering green alien, but a dome-topped, sleek, silver metallic disc. In what seemed like a fraction of a second, the flying saucer rose at breathtaking speed and disappeared high into the clouds.

This is how he initially recalled things, but there were definite discrepancies in his story. Partial memory loss was apparent, and as much as two hours could not be accounted for following this episode. It was decided by Arthur Tomlinson that the only course of action was to retrieve any

OF ILKLEY MOOR!

The correct and usual method employed by BEAMS researchers is that when investigating the seemingly fantastic or implausible, one's first consideration should be the more mundane or conventional possibilities. These safety procedures have been carried out for this article. However, this particular case has some very sound points of argument for being genuine. Ken Parsons looks into the matter.

missing memory by employing the services of a qualified hypnotist. Although the testifier then shunned (as he continues to do now) all forms of publicity, the media eventually got wind of what had happened to him.

Amongst all of the various comings and goings at his house, one day there was a dramatic development. Two men claiming to be from the Ministry of Defence (bearing in mind that the Menwith Hill base is only 8-10 miles down the road from here), paid a call. Flashing their ID cards (which looked authentic enough), they introduced themselves as 'Forester' and 'Davis', and asked to examine the photographic evidence. These visitors were quickly shown to the door, and like many others had done before them, left long-faced and empty-handed.

Meanwhile the blurred photo and negative was examined by Kodak and declared genuine, (in as much as the originals had not been tampered with in any way). Although quite fuzzy, the film had indeed captured a peculiar-looking green figure with its right arm raised!

The policeman also noticed, about a week after the event, that the polarity of his compass had been reversed, so that it now pointed South. The compass was examined at the University of Manchester Institute of Science and Technology, where it was discovered that ordinary magnets available to the public had no permanent effect on a similar compass. The only thing that could alter the polarity would be a very powerful industrial magnet available from Japan, or a rapidly applied or pulsed magnetic field generated by mains electricity.

Later, and with full approval of the witness, hypno-regression was carried out...

FORGET ROSWELL — THIS IS THE REAL MCCOY!

As a result of all his dedication and hard work, Arthur Tomlinson has brought forth some exceptional details about this case. Since then, his enquiry has been tackled by other researchers, most notably Peter Hough (who now owns the copyright to the alien photo) who, together with clinical psychologist Jim Singleton, has arrived at the following facts.

A crater like ditch where the silver disc was seen.

The hill where the swastika stone is situated, approximately quarter of a mile from the white wells building.

Feeling like a specimen in a laboratory he became quite anxious and attempted to struggle, but was made to relax by soothing, telepathically conveyed words of reassurance.

After chancing upon the hovering silver disc, the one-time policeman was suddenly engulfed by an electrical field of some sort, which levitated him up inside the craft. Next, he was positioned onto a table in a white room. Feeling like a specimen in a laboratory he became quite anxious and attempted to struggle, but was made to relax by soothing, telepathically conveyed words of reassurance.

His captors were described as having green, roughish-looking skin, and were of small stature, "about four foot, with big pointed ears and large black eyes. They haven't got a nose and only a small mouth. Their hands are enormous, and their arms are long. They've got funny feet, like a V-shape, two big toes (cloven hooves). They've got three big fingers, like sausages."

Repeatedly, a kind of illuminated scanning device was passed over his body, before he was invited to sit up and leave the aliens' examination table. After a short breather he was taken to another room and shown harrowing future images concerning the pollution of Earth and its eventual destruction. The next thing that he remembered was finding himself back on land at the exact outcrop where he had first seen the craft.

The final hypnotically-recalled remembrance revealed that he had taken the crucial photograph, not shortly after spotting the little green man, as he first believed, but right at the very end of the abduction ordeal!

In the light of this last mind-blowing revelation, the raised arm of the creature is now taken to mean that it was waving adieu!

WINDOW AREA

There is no doubt that some strange things can happen on the bleak moors of Yorkshire. Ilkley is rumoured to have been host to at least a couple of other alien confrontations.

Peter Hough was recently approached by a woman keen to recount her UFO sighting in the summer of 1987. She and her husband lived in Ilkley. They were returning home between 1.00 and 2.00am along the Addingham Road when they saw a mass of white lights hovering over some rocks. They initially believed the lights to be coming from some farm buildings, until she realised that there were no farmhouses on that part of the moor. They observed the phenomena all the way into Ilkley.

The pathway to the white wells building.

Added to this are strong traditions from peoples (some long-departed, some still living) about apparitions, goblins, earth spirits, fairyfolk and numerous other miracles in these parts.

The White Wells building was constructed around a natural spring and bequeathed to the people of Ilkley by a wealthy landowner at the beginning of the 19th Century. William Butterfield, the Bathman, witnessed a bizarre sight when he went to unlock the premises one morning in 1815.

All over the water and dipping into it were a lot of little creatures dressed in green, none of them more than 18 inches high, and making a chattering sound. They appeared to be taking a bath, only they kept all their clothes on. Then they all took off, toppling and tumbling, head over heels, towards the hill where the policeman was to have his experience with a green entity 162 years later.

Just recently, certain reporters have sought to debunk the Ilkley Moor alien case, and using skillful evasion of the facts have attempted to cheapen this quintessential examination. However, their campaign has not worked. They say that "The truth will out", and it certainly has triumphed here... and although they had their brief moments of recorded glory, the doubters' mission has turned into a dead duck. Unless I am shown firm evidence to the contrary, the Ilkley encounter proves higher-intelligence visitation.

OTHER ODDITIES ABOUT THE MOORS

Although called the 'Swastika' (and rarely The Fylfot Stone), far from being what most people would recognise as a swastika – which is in fact an ancient symbol for peace and light, along with being a charm against 'the evil eye' superstition – this badly weathered pattern resembles something closer to a star constellation. Below this is the outline of an amoeboid. Investigator and head of BEAMS West Yorkshire, Mark Gibbons, reported a paranormal occurrence whilst visiting this time-worn position.

On 30th March, 1996, Mark, along with his aunt, her niece Michelle and her son Craig, went to this the point which overlooks the Wharfe Valley. The intriguing piece of coarse sandstone which measures about 19 feet long and about four feet thick, had been the source of many a rumour, and it was decided to take some pictures of the site. Upon touching the stone, Mark, who has certain psychic abilities, claimed that he could immediately feel energies rushing through his body. Immediately the nagging pain of an old arthritic complaint vanished. His aunt (who is also psychic and very spiritual) then proceeded to meditate and begin a conversation with an unseen entity on the rock, when suddenly something happened which was only visible to Mark. To his surprise, he watched a stunning, glowing, violet-coloured 'vision' shoot out from the swastika. Standing back, thinking it was a trick of the light, Mark turned away, and then looked again, and the figure had completely gone.

Mark says, "It is up to the reader to decide whether or not to believe what I have reported. To my mind this event actually happened."

There are various stone circles on Ilkley Moor, the best known of which is the 'Twelve Apostles', almost certainly planned in its orientation to various other stone monuments out here. Photographers of this site have reported anomalous glows and distortions on their prints.

Our intelligence gatherers came up with two unconfirmed reports (one from the 1970s and the other of a much more recent date) concerning a potential military radio-delay building off the beaten track over Ilkley Moor. Using the few clues to hand, Mark and fellow researcher/archaeologist Gary Foster have indeed confirmed this significant discovery close to another ancient monument, that of the 'Cross Stone'.

They stumbled across an installation approx 200x110m, surrounded by a double wire mesh perimeter fence, comprising of two large steel masts like radio pylons, with equipment housings at their bases. Also present was what looked like a guard tower offset to the main area, covering an entrance to the compound. Numerous satellite-type dishes were clustered around the lower portion of the two steel towers. After collecting as much useful data as possible they departed.

DEBATE

After speaking with an ex-RAF Communication/Radar officer, Gary Foster has come up with the following:

"The double perimeter fence is a standard security set up for many communications sites in remote areas, as an outside tampering deterrent.

HOW TO FIND ILKLEY MOOR AND THE ENTITY LOCATION

Come off the M62 at junction 26 and take the M606 signposted to Bradford. After two miles turn left on to the A6177 ring road, then follow the A650 to Keighley. Three miles past Keighley turn right onto the A6034 for five miles to Addingham. At Addingham turn right on to the A65 for six miles to Ilkley.

In Ilkley town centre, just before the railway station, there is a sign to the moor. There is plenty of room to park. Take the path that runs to the left of the White Wells building, which is visible from the road. This is now a museum and we think well worth a look. The next leg of the short journey is very steep.

Follow the path behind the museum up into a gully. Take the path to the right, up the side of the hill. The stand of trees on the left is where the policeman was paralysed by the entity. Continue for about 100 yards up the path to the crown of the hill. On your right is the pit where the policeman took the photograph of the being. Walk into the pit and around the outcrop, where there is an even deeper excavation about 40 feet across; this is where the silver disc hovered.

However, the guard tower at the entrance to the installation compound is unusual. If it is a guard tower, why? What for? These seem to be rather over-elaborate security measures for somewhere in the middle of nowhere!

"It also had a manually operated swivel mounted micro-transceiver dish attached to the tower. What is this for? And why at this installation? The masts themselves appear to be of a standard type. The satellite micro-transceiver dishes are commonplace and don't indicate anything other than a high siting location."

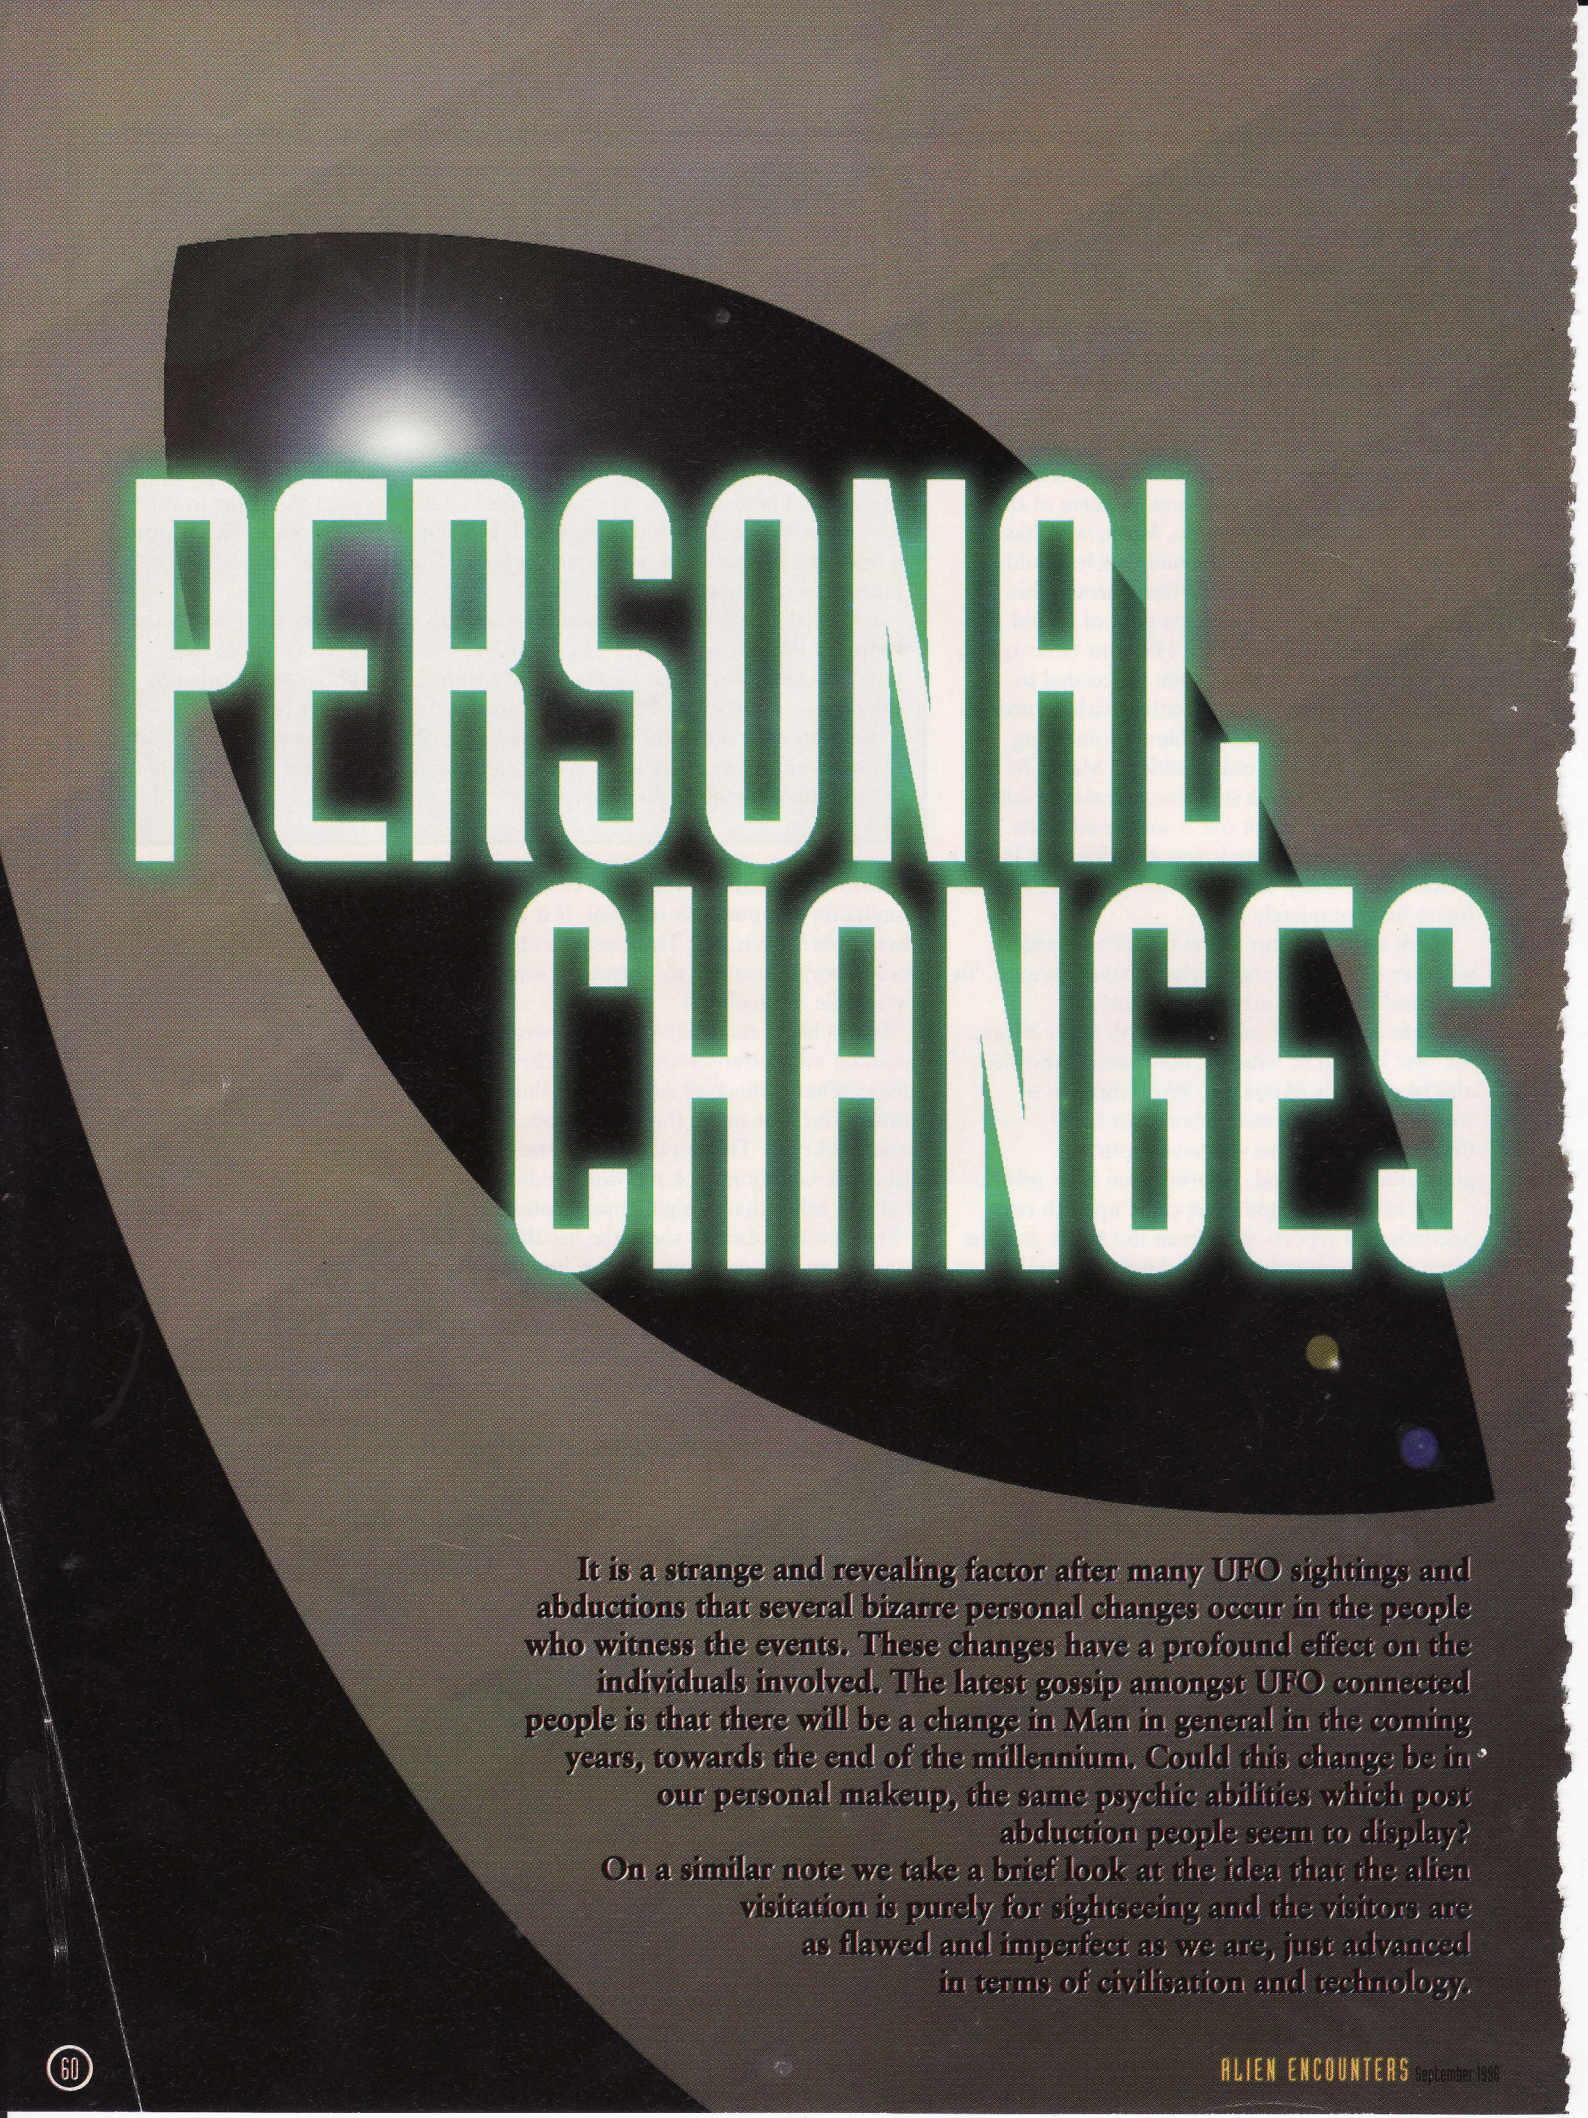

My own calculations show the installation to stand on at least one powerful ley line, and in between two important alignment markers.

All in all, this strange little communications unit is quite interesting, and I am sure that we will be hearing more about this exceptionally interesting place... Ilkley Moor.

PERSONAL CHANGES

It is a strange and revealing factor after many UFO sightings and abductions that several bizarre personal changes occur in the people who witness the events. These changes have a profound effect on the individuals involved. The latest gossip amongst UFO connected people is that there will be a change in Man in general in the coming years, towards the end of the millennium. Could this change be in our personal makeup, the same psychic abilities which post abduction people seem to display?

On a similar note we take a brief look at the idea that the alien visitation is purely for sightseeing and the visitors are as flawed and imperfect as we are, just advanced in terms of civilisation and technology.

A TRANSFORMATION IN SIGHT

Could UFOs appear deliberately in order to heighten our psychic or paranormal abilities? One thing's for sure, says Chris Kenworthy, if you do see a UFO you'll never quite be the same again...

Seeing a UFO is bound to be a shocking, even terrifying, experience, but most people who observe a strange craft tend to think that will be the end of it. They little suspect that their whole way of life can change as the result of an encounter. For many, this change is slight, with a new interest in ufology and related subjects. This reaction would be expected from any unusual experience. For others, however, the change is so extreme that it can be thought of as a complete transformation.

There are as many ways of categorising UFO sightings and encounters as there are UFO researchers, but in terms of transformations, there are two main types of experience. Firstly, there are abductions, and secondly, sightings. Abductions may be hazy memories or clear recollections, but the effects are usually negative. The personality of the abductee isn't so much transformed as damaged. Whatever abductions may be, whether a physical phenomenon or a purely psychological occurrence, they tend to leave the victims worse off. Abductees feel violated and traumatised, and the benefits appear to be few.

POSITIVE SIGHTINGS

This is in sharp contrast to the other category of witnesses, those who have simply seen a UFO. The experience of UFO spotters is so different, with so many positive benefits, that it seems abductions and standard UFO sightings may be totally unrelated. Whatever theories turn out to be true, there is little doubt that seeing UFOs can have radical effects on the rest of your life.

These psychological aftershocks are so strong that some researchers believe they can indicate whether or not a sighting was genuine. Most UFOs are nothing more than misperceptions of stars, balloons, aircraft and freak weather conditions. Research usually weeds these out from the ten percent of sightings that remain unexplained. Although people may be initially frightened by UFOs that turn out to be something much more mundane, research shows that only in unexplained cases does a personality transformation occur.

FALSE WITNESS

This being so, some researchers take note of the observer's response to the phenomenon. If they are startled but psychologically unchanged, the sighting probably has a mundane explanation. If the person undergoes major psychic change, however, you can be certain that the UFO was in some way paranormal.

Sceptics have dismissed this evidence, saying that the veil of mystery which remains around some cases creates the apparent transformation. They say that if an unexplained UFO sighting is solved, and proved to be something other than an alien craft, the personality will readjust. This response is reasonable, but doesn't fit in with all the observations – it also contradicts the experience of people who see UFOs.

Humans are remarkably poor witnesses. We remember according to our beliefs rather than our observations, adding new details and removing others. Our memory is soft and inconsistent, so relying on witness reports of UFOs is problematic. When people become excited, believing that a UFO is present, their perceptions become even more exaggerated, leading to confusion and exaggerated memories. Sceptics argue that this sort of paranoid excitement leads the observer to believe that an alien spaceship is present, when all that's being seen is an aircraft or cloud. Once the sighting is over, the imagination fills in details, twisting the memory to fit the UFO scenario.

Again, this is a reasonable observation, but people who see UFOs believe strongly that this isn't the whole story. When people see genuine, unexplained UFOs, they often sense that something strange is happening a moment or two before the sighting.

Could it be that our perceptions are heightened as a result of witnessing a UFO? Some people have been noted to develop slight psychic abilities.

We all see strange lights from time to time, glancing out of the car in the hope it's a UFO, but a genuine sighting is completely different. There's an immediate sense that something odd is going on, that a paranormal event is taking place. The fact that, in many cases, this sensation occurs just before observation, rules out the sceptical claims of excited misperception.

WHO'S WATCHING WHO?

UFO sightings that trigger personality transformation have the following characteristics. As mentioned above, the witness usually senses something strange a moment before it appears, and the UFO – no matter how vague, distant or mundane-looking – is perceived as being not of this world. There is the feeling of being watched, which leads sceptics to (correctly) point out the sense of paranoia present in UFO sightings. Seeing a UFO is not like seeing any other aircraft or vehicle: there is a definite sense of interaction, almost as though you were meant to see it. It could be this involvement with UFOs that gives a sighting the power to transform a personality.

The after-effects of a sighting can be mild at first, with colours and sound seeming richer and other perceptions heightened. In some cases, witnesses get a strong sense of déjà vu, and begin to wonder if they'd seen other UFOs earlier in life, now somehow forgotten. This may well be possible, as a person who sees one UFO is likely to see several in their lifetime.

These psychological changes could be put down to the surprise of the event, an after-effect of shock, but it doesn't end there. During the following weeks, years and months, other changes take place. These range from increased intuition, through to paranormal activity. It is as though seeing a UFO is a trigger moment, which opens a person up to paranormal possibility.

OPENING THE DOORS...

It isn't at all unusual for UFO witnesses to see ghost within a few months of the first sighting. This could mean that ghosts are always present in our surroundings, and that it takes a certain kind of person to see them. A UFO witness, having being made aware of possibilities beyond the ordinary, may be such a person.

Or it could be that somebody who has seen as UFO is in some way changed, empowered with an energy that can encourage paranormal activity.

Premonitions are also common, though not in the way you might expect. UFO witnesses don't find that they are able to predict air disasters or world changes, so much as developments in their own lives. In a way, this is more significant than predicting a war – after all, major disasters happen all the time. There is always some newsworthy event going on, and coincidence alone means that many people will dream of it.

For instance, every night hundreds of people dream about sinking ships. When a ship sinks, as they do from time to time, these people may see it as being a premonition, even though it is nothing of the sort. The kind of premonition experienced by UFO a witness, however, is more like an extended version of déjà vu, sensing events a few minutes or hours before they happen.

Sometimes these sensed futures are undramatic, such as knowing that you will meet a certain person or see a particular sight. It could be said that we all imagine futures, and many of them come true, but UFO witnesses find that they predict future events in their own lives with complete accuracy. This can be pretty disturbing. Anyway, the fact that the events foreseen are mundane shows that UFO witnesses may be tapping into a normal process. It could be that the human brain is always capable of such precognitive ability, but that it takes an acceptance of the unusual in order to release it.

In a few cases, UFO witness find that they are able to read the thoughts of others. This is usually on a small scale, involving vague impressions and ideas rather than full mind reading, but it is still a significant enhancement of ordinary abilities.

DREAM ON

UFO witnesses can find their dreams enriched, or develop sharper perceptions of distance and shape. There are also reports of people acquiring a general sense of peace and of feeling at one with the universe. Again, this is in direct contrast to abductees, who often feel that their life has been ruined by an alien invasion of their privacy. The memory of alien faces and bodies is so traumatic, it could even be said to frighten people away from their paranormal abilities.

We recognise that something changes when you see a UFO, which can trigger a personality transformation and heighten perceptions and psychic ability. The mystery is, who or what causes this change? It seems likely that being open to new ideas and paranormal beliefs could be all that is required to develop psychic ability, but it should be remembered that at the time of the sighting many witnesses feel they are being observed by the aliens. If this is the case, it could be that the aliens are here for this very reason – to trigger our psychic ability.

Humans are remarkably poor witnesses and our memories can add or remove details after the event. Therefore many sightings are simple mistakes caused by the witness being over-excited.

True UFO witnesses can find their dreams enriched, or develop sharper perceptions of distance and shape.

BY 'ECK! UFOS OVER YORKSHIRE

any parts of the world are considered to be, in the words of Ufologists, 'window areas' – Bonnybridge in Scotland and the county of Wiltshire being just two examples. One area not usually discussed, however, is Yorkshire, which is strange considering the rich vein of UFO lore found in the county.

Yorkshire's two best-documented cases of alien abduction date from the 1980s. The first was the mysterious death of a man called Adamski (no relation to the American contactee George Adamski). Mr Adamski's corpse was found sprawled on top of a coal heap by PC Alan Godfrey. Godfrey was part of a team looking into the disappearance of Mr Adamski. What was bizarre about the discovery was the absence of footprints around the body: what's more, the coal hadn't even been disturbed. The only logical way that Adamski's body could have ended up on top of the heap was if it had been lowered onto it from above. There was no way the corpse could have been dragged to the top without leaving a trail. Even more startling were the coroner's findings. Apparently a strange substance resembling cream was discovered around Adamski's neck – a substance not previously known to man.

Forget flat caps, Emmerdale and puddings, Yorkshire should be more famous for its UFO sightings. Marcus Walker reports on some of the strange objects seen around this normally down-to-earth county.

Yet this was not the only occasion Alan Godfrey would be involved with possible UFO activities. In November 1980 whilst driving back to Todmorden police station along the Burnley Road, PC Godfrey encountered a lit round object near the roadside. The policeman stopped his car and began to sketch the object. The next thing he knew, half an hour had suddenly disappeared and the object had completely vanished.

Mr Godfrey later underwent hypnotic regression, bringing to light his full abduction experience. What's interesting about this case is that several police officers on the Moors saw lights in the sky during the same evening, but nobody travelling along the Burnley Road around the same time that PC Godfrey was allegedly abducted saw the object, or reported seeing Godfrey's empty patrol car. However, a witness did come forward later who claimed to have seen the object placing Alan Godfrey back into his car. It's important to note that during the days leading up to Godfrey's abduction, the Todmorden Police had been chasing unidentified objects from Ilkley to Halifax.

The Pendle Window: An Alternative Theory

From what we already know about the Pendle area and other places near the Lancashire/Yorkshire border, it's easy to assume that there are indeed some strange forces at work. One man, Paul Devereux, believes there's an alternative explanation for all the weird goings-on.

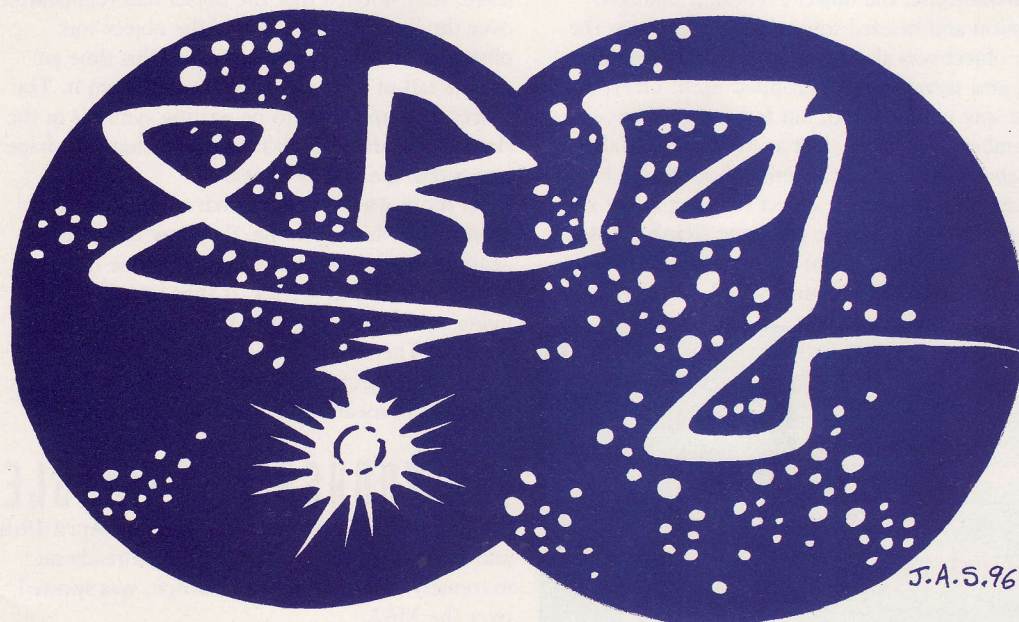

Paul feels that faultlines passing through the local rocks generate energy which can be seen as an 'Earthlight', a term coined by Paul in 1980. He goes on to speculate that this energy may interface with the human brain and manifest itself as a UFO abduction experience. It had already been established by scientists that lights were present in areas prone to seismic activity – Paul was to take that knowledge one step further.

Project Pennine was instigated by Paul Devereux. Accompanied by eminent UFO researchers including Andy Roberts, Paul set out to trace the history of strange lights in the Pennine area. Their research uncovered a long history of weird lights in the vicinity. These lights had obviously been interpreted in different ways throughout the ages, some associating them with witchcraft, and others with demons. They are now being associated with UFO sightings. Pendle Hill is another area which has become synonymous with the 'Earthlights' phenomena, and is in fact another region steeped in a history of sightings of unusual light displays. Once again these were initially felt to be the work of demons and witches, and are now linked to the UFO subject. Admittedly these areas do have a high concentration of UFO abductions and encounters, but if Paul Devereux is correct with his 'Earthlights' theory, we may be closer to understanding this bizarre phenomenon.

DEFINITELY NOT SANTA CLAUS...

The case of the Ilkley Moor alien is described on page 56, but there are also other, more recent sightings. At Greetland, Halifax, last Christmas Eve, members of BEAMS UFO group noticed an object which looked like the moon, but was coloured a strange shade of orange. This object was spotted at 6.30pm. Witnesses claimed it looked as though something was about to eclipse

The only logical way that Adamski's body could have ended up on top of the heap was if it had been lowered onto it from above.

Unusual light displays in the Pendle Hill area could be attributed to natural energy passing through local rocks.

SUPERNATURAL SOWERBY

Moving to Sowerby, Halifax, a large UFO was seen on February 26th. The object was seen for about half an hour, emitting pulses of white light. At around 9pm, people reported seeing a Tornado fighter heading towards the Sowerby area. Eye witnesses claim that as the Tornado confronted the object, it shot off at a great speed, but didn't make any discernable sound.

On the 29th, a huge triangular-shaped object was encountered by a single witness, who claimed that the object first appeared travelling from the Scammonden area and suddenly stopped and hovered above their home. The object was described as being triangular in shape with about 25 different coloured lights, and the witness could only compare it to something from Star Trek. The UFO hovered above the house, about 10 metres above the roof, for roughly five minutes. It then took off again at great speed. Sadly, no photographs were taken for the annals of Ufology.

RELEASE THE BALLS

Since March 28th this year, many orange balls of light have been spotted around the Scammonden area (Australia is currently experiencing the same phenomena almost daily). Three members of BEAMS decided to go up to Scammonden to investigate. About 30 minutes later they saw a bright orange ball of light, moving at extreme speed towards where they'd parked their car. Suddenly the object stopped and started to dance up and down. The object, viewed through binoculars, was described as a perfect sphere. The group attempted to initiate contact by flashing their headlights in the direction of the object, but without success. Altogether, the sighting lasted for about 10 minutes.

Just as the BEAMS members were about to leave, they noticed that the object had reappeared over the Sowerby area. Again the object was observed through binoculars, only this time an orange tail of light was seen coming from it. The object then appeared to be writing symbols in the sky, shortly after which it stopped, changed shape into a triangle and disappeared.

Yet more was to happen that evening. As the group were driving home, they saw the object again reappear over Sowerby. This time it demonstrated a new trick. It split into two red lights, which proceeded to dance around one another. Then there was a flash of violet light before the object finally vanished. Again, the lack of a camera meant no photos were taken.

THE YORKSHIRE TRIANGLE

Scammonden was in the news again on April 19th and 20th when the triangular UFO, already an extremely common sight in Europe, was spotted over the M62.

Members of BEAM UFO group reported tracking an unidentified object from Greetland to Blackstone Edge Moor.

the object when it suddenly moved quickly downwards, as if something was pulling it out of sight. At this point the witnesses got into their car and followed the object to Blackstone Edge Moor on the Yorkshire/Lancashire border. We understand that the object eventually changed direction and headed towards Scammonden: the same object was also been reported earlier this year, and seems to have cropped up in Liverpool.

We stay in Greetland, but fast forward to December 27th 1995. Just as Mr Paul O'Malley was about to turn his car into School Street he noticed a large metallic object hanging in the sky. The object seemed to be changing shape. O'Malley reported the sighting, but no further information about the case could be uncovered.

Eyewitnesses claim that a Tornado approached a large UFO above Sowerby, whereupon the UFO disappeared at great speed.

The first sighting was on Saturday 19th when a young couple reported that they had seen a round object with lights revolving around it. They observed the object for about 5 minutes, reporting that it moved vertically downwards before eventually seeming to disappear into the ground. Once again the sighting was reported to the BEAMS West Yorkshire Branch. The investigators were fast to react, and were soon heading towards Scammonden. It was at this point that they noticed the triangular object hovering over the M62. The object was covered in bright blue and green lights, which appeared to be flashing.

After speeding up and slowing down, it vanished into the only cloud in the sky. Five people witnessed this strange phenomenon.

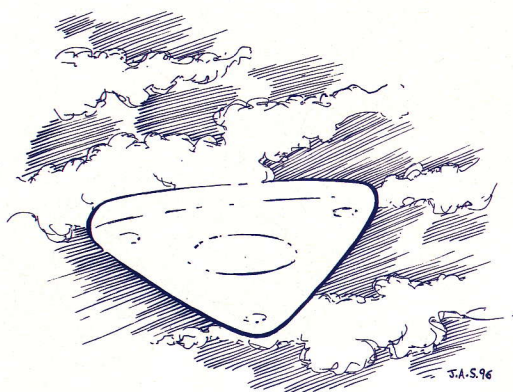

The following day the craft was seen again, and an orange ball of light has also been observed in Burnley and Pendle (a notorious window area in its own right).

Returning to the triangular object, it was seen in Liverpool approximately three weeks ago. There were also traces of a possible landing by this object, but unfortunately the landing site had been disturbed by the first people to arrive at the site. Curiously, a duck was found nearby with its beak removed.

Apparently this area of Yorkshire is becoming known as the Yorkshire Triangle as if you join Scammonden, Todmorden and Ilkley on a map, you get a perfect triangle.

A STRANGE ENCOUNTER IN HUDDERSFIELD

On Thursday 13th June, Mr Neil Jenkins (pseudonym) frantically called Yorkshire BEAMS at 11.45pm. Clearly distressed, Jenkins began to relate what had happened to him on the way home from a friend's house. Near a church, Jenkins noticed a white light which he took for a star. The light was bouncing around in the sky, until it became stationery. At first, Jenkins put this down to a quick drink he'd had earlier, and sat down on a nearby bench. Looking at the star again, he noticed it changed colour to red. BEAMS would have probably put this down to the drink as well had it not been for a similar sighting from an independent and very sober witness.

This story now takes a peculiar twist – Jenkins suddenly had an overwhelming urge to go to a clearing in some woods close to where he lives to meet some 'beings'. Jenkins was asked if anything else unusual had happened to him recently, and more of the story was revealed. He stated that on Tuesday 11th June, he had been walking down a road which he had been down on many occasions, listening to his Walkman, when he came to a certain point where he normally turns his Walkman off. On this evening, Jenkins had a strange compulsion to walk up some steps which had appeared out of nowhere. He walked up them and came into a clearing near the woods. Jenkins, who has lived in the area for the past three years, was adamant that the steps had not been there before, as he walked past that area every day! He also stated that he was going to be met by beings and this was the place where it was going to be. He later claimed that he was going to go there and see if anything happened.

When BEAMS contacted him again a few days after the initial 'phone call Jenkins said that he had intended to go but after ringing BEAMS he had fallen asleep and woke up the next morning on the floor by the 'phone. A strange case indeed: narcolepsy – a rare condition characterised by the uncontrollable urge to fall into sessions of deep sleep – could be a possible explanation for Mr Jenkins's problems.

Jenkins came across a flight of steps, which although he walked that route every day, had never been there before.

Encounters would like to thank Mark Gibbons, Leader of the BEAMS West Yorkshire Branch, for his invaluable assistance in compiling this article. If anybody has anything to report, or would simply like to enquire about membership to BEAMS, then Mark can be reached by writing to: BEAMS West Yorkshire, 39 School Street, Greetland, Halifax, West Yorks, HX4 8JB. According to Jenkins, he witnessed a star bounce around in the sky, and then change to a red colour.
